"Of course, it will save doctor's bills, my dear," said Archibald, rhapsodising on the subject to his wife. "I shall be able to run you and the children into the country so often, that mere health can be had for the asking. We shan't pay another cab fare for years, and we can snap our fingers at the railway. Then, again, I badly want some sort of hobby to fill my spare moments."

Amelia could have suggested several things herself. The wringer wanted overhauling, and a few shelves in the scullery would have been useful; to say nothing of a coat of whitewash on the cellars. But these trifles vanished when she thought of the humiliation of the Mumfords at seeing her in her own motor-car. And that new style of motor-hat with the voluminous veil would just suit her particular style of beauty.

The car was brought round next day, arriving just as the Mumfords were going by, and those snobby people over the way happened to be outside. It was necessary to remove part of the fence to get it on the lawn, but Amelia would have cheerfully seen half the house taken down, she was so gratified.

"You'll hardly need to drive her," said the late owner, when he had poured a small volume of technicalities into Tootleboom's ear. "She practically goes by herself."

Archibald soon had his coat off to it. In a couple of hours he'd made such a thorough examination that you couldn't see the pattern of his clothes for grease and dirt. Just when he'd got half a can of petrol close handy he moved one of the levers absently, and the thing let off a bang like a four-point-seven in full bloom. Archibald hadn't expected this. He gave a spasmodic leap, upset the petrol, and in three seconds had that trellis work by the rockery blazing at top speed. It took fourteen pails of water and some energy to put it out.

"You're not going the right way about it, dear," said Amelia; "I've seen the men turn that little handle in the front."

"Are you, though?" said Tootleboom with a leer. "Well, if you keep a sharp look-out perhaps you'll see 'em turn another handle at the back. You leave this car to me, Mrs. Tootleboom, if you don't mind."

Amelia retired indoors while Archibald took the cover off the front and exposed the works. After that he got underneath. He was full of curiosity. He'd heard so much about the sparking plug that he wanted to make sure just where it was. Amelia was curious, too. She came out again and began fiddling with the gear. The result of their combined efforts was that Archibald found the sparking plug just when Amelia had put some life into it. He gave a yell and went dancing off among the sweet-peas.

"What are y' up to?" he roared. "Think it's a musical box, or what? Leggo that handle!"

Tootleboom isn't a bad sort, really. And his bad temper is short. He was so pleased when he found out which was the shunt box without anyone telling him that he became quite genial. Instead of sending his two boys indoors with a flick of the ear, he just beamed.

"There's a nice carriage daddy's bought you!" he chirped. "If you're good boys you shall both have a ride in it. Get up in the seat, my sons, and play chauffeur while daddy gets some oil for the reversible gear."

Give Archibald a few technical terms to roll off his tongue and he's as happy as a send-boy. Only he hasn't learned yet that his boys have inherited that same insatiable appetite for knowledge. While he was fishing about after the oil-can Archie and Edwin got busy with the levers, and with sudden energy the car started to move off the lawn and take a short trip across the vegetable plot. Before Percy guessed what was happening they were ploughing over the cabbage and making the scarlet runners look tiresome. The tomato plants came next, and they were just sporting among the asparagus when Amelia looked out of the window and screamed.

Archibald was behind the vegetables with the reverent oil-can in his hand. Before he could straighten his back the car made a dive into the front door of the shed and brought it down like a peak of earth. It was enough to smash that Tootleboom had to wriggle his way out like a worm. By the time the boys were upstairs in bed, he managed to get that way with a slipper and liven things up.

Of course you can have too much of a good thing. In case he should feel satisfied Tootleboom just covered the car where it stood and left it for that day. When he came down in the morning he bought a book on motoring and started afresh. He learned so much in the first hour that he not only knew how to drive the car forwards, but backwards as well. He mastered the reversing movement so thoroughly that he backed the car into the boundary fence of the garden just where the neighbor's cucumber frame happened to be, and brought the old man out in a white heat.

"I'll accept no apology, sir! A deliberate act of vandalism! Wanton and malicious damage, I call it. You shall pay for it, sir!"

Tootleboom had been going to say the same thing, only he couldn't get in a word.

Before all, listening to him complaining he soon saw for himself that there was work to be done.

such a fine [illegible] he was able to go the whole length the road with no more damage than the upsetting of a couple of lamp posts.

"You can pack the trunks, my dear," he said. "I think we'll run down to Hastings for a week-end. This is where you'll see the practical side of having our own car."

Tootleboom's car stood in a vibrating condition rather longer than usual. The metal clutch didn't seem to bite, or perhaps the trembler coil was overheated. He was on the point of getting out with a spanner when it started off with a jerk, just missing the prize Pomeranian from No. 27. Lucky escape that, seeing the owner refused fifty guineas for him.

But the run was interesting. You never knew which side of the road Tootleboom was going to drive, or whether it would be the pavement instead. Most of the pedestrians hopped into front gardens for safety!

Finally, he had to go round and round the parish church until the petrol gave out. By that time Amelia was in a state of nervous collapse, and Tootleboom didn't dare think of the damage.

Any body in need of a cheap car has only to call at Hope Cottage, Iowborne. Ask for Tootlebcom, Christian name Archibald.

THE OLDEST CLOWN

"Jimmy" Doughty Takes a benefit at Brighton

James Doughty, the oldest living clown still before the public, celebrated his 92nd birthday by a benefit performance on the West Pier at Brighton, where for the past thirty-two years he has appeared with his cleverly-trained dogs. The square enclosure formed at the head of the pier was lined by admirers, and as "Jimmy," with painted face and attired in clown's costume, emerged from his little pavilion he was heartily cheered. In spite of his great age, and notwithstanding his frail dress, Doughty braved a boisterous south-westerly wind in a manner which showed his wonderful vitality. So strong was the gale that a wire-haired terrier, comically dressed in latest feminine fashion, was almost blown over as, followed by its master, it walked on its hind legs "shaking hands" with highly-amused adults and delighted children. In addition to jumping through hoops, the dogs performed various tricks, and the crowd laughed heartily when, after feigning sleep, they, at the cry "Police," scampered in all directions. Several artists gave their services, and Doughty, judging by the manner in which the crowd contributed the collection, had a "bumper" benefit. He was heartily congratulated, and the substantial presents showered upon him included one from a millionaire. Doughty attributes his great age to his active life. "I was an acrobat," he declared with a smile.

CHANCE FOR FRUIT GROWERS

Speaking at a complimentary dinner given by Victorians in London, Dr. Mead said the Victorian Land Settlement Delegation had finished its work in Great Britain—the work of placing information before those desiring freehold homes on liberal terms on 150,000 acres of good agricultural land. The new settlers, he said, who took up general farming and dairying would find customers for everything they grew and prices that would leave them a handsome reward.

Fruit-growers were going out from England, and they would find a country with great horticultural possibilities. There was a large demand for canned vegetables in the East and an unlimited demand for fresh fruit in Europe. In no other country than Australia, said Dr. Mead, could a man with $1,000 to $10,000 capital find a more attractive and healthful home.

VEGETABLES THRIVE HERE

One of the finest cabbages ever seen in Fort William weighs 19 pounds, and is of excellent quality. Mr. Coombs, who grew it, say he has many more almost as large.

A FINE FISH

Capt. Hunter, fish and game inspector, St. John, N.B., was presented with a pickerel which weighed twelve pounds. This fine specimen was caught in the bay near Northport.

KEPT HAPPENING

By Helen Heip

James came into the house in the darkness of night. He moved very quietly and carefully, feeling in his pocket for his match box. It was there—beautiful thing—but it hadn't a match in it.

So James continued to move about in his little home neat with the air of a burglar investing the domicile of another.

Jupiter Maj not been out his late the peace—it was his own, well-earned, perfectly acknowledged judge night and the only one he obtained in a week of [illegible]. And yet, having inadvertently caused Jones his last match, he moved among his own furniture with a wonderful solicitude.

It was not so much that he endeavored to be silent as that he was cautious—that is the word—cautious. He went about the seemingly simple task of getting from the front door to the staircase with a certain circumspection. And right here something happened, something he had planned to fear was going to happen from the moment he stepped the birthday home—in short, James fell over a chair.

It was a chair that had not been there when he left the house that night, or morning, the [illegible] quality of himself, [illegible] he knew not of it exactly, and [illegible] the [illegible] dark.

This night [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SCHOOLS RE-OPEN.

Good Attendance of Scholars for the Opening Day.

Yesterday morning the Peterborough Public Schools were re-opened after the Christmas holidays. The attendance of pupils was good and every teacher was on hand.

The only change in the school staff is that of Mr. Park of Moose Jaw, a son of Dr. Park who is on theNormal Schoolstaff, will succeed Mr. Kelly as principal of the East Ward school.

Miss Elliott of this city has been placed on the supply staff.

The Collegiate Institute also began the second half of the year's work yesterday morning with a great number of those on the roll present.

HOCKEY NOTES.

For a junior team, the Peterborough "Grillers" are a pretty husky combination, none of the boys weigh less than 154 lbs.

Though the ice was soft on Monday night, steam was kept up all through the game.

As the Simcoe team has been suspended for the season, all O.H.A. teams are cautioned not play any exhibition games against them.

MEN-YOU NEED NERVE

The nerves control all actions of the body so that anything that debilitates them will weaken all organs of the system. Early indiscretions and Excesses have ruined thousands of promising young men. Violent Earthquake Causes Loss of Many Lives in Veryny, Russia

IMPRISONED LIVES

By Ada Patterson.

The telephone rang. The call was an unwelcome one, for it had come at the busiest hour of a busy day. It seemed that life was a busy jest, the world a tumbling, busy planet, and humanity a busy stream, all hurrying, all worrying, with each new task crowding upon the heels of the last and not time to complete the thing undertaken before the thing contemplated screamed for attention.

That was the way I felt when I lifted the telephone receiver to an unwilling ear. Why should people call at busy hours? Why did telephones ring at tangled times? Why were telephones anyway? This was my mood until—

"Is that you?"—a sad old voice came thread-like over its path of wire—"I am sorry to break in upon your busy life, but my poor wife wanted to send a message."

A hush fell upon the unquiet room. The stream of the city's harsh noises ceased pouring in at the windows. It was as though a voice had spoken the words, "Peace, be still," and all the world listened. For the words that had trembled upon the telephone had conjured a vision.

I saw a woman's face, deep etched with lines of pain and white as the pillow on which it lay. I saw great eyes, blue-grey and full of wistful inquiry, looking at me out of that face, [illegible] and [illegible] full of quavering music, shot through with pain and broken by weakness, say:

"My one prayer is that I may have enough work and be able to do it."

The woman who had sent the message is a genius and, like many geniuses, poor. The weight of age is upon her and illness has not lifted its heavy hand from her in all the years since some of us were born. She lies in the sick bed, with pillows at her back and a tiny dog at her feet. Her weak hand guides her pencil over a pad of yellow paper. That frail hand and the blunted pencil and the yellow pad are all that keep her under another shelter than that which charity gives the poor.

"My wife," the sad old voice went on, "wants you to know that the story you had talked about will be written—if she lives. But she says I should tell you that the doctor thinks the optic nerve is affected and—" The message ended in a sob.

A QUITTER NEVER GETS ANYWHERE

By Herbert Kaufman.

Every man who ever did anything really great did it by himself. Success can't be gained without confidence. Half the fibre of achievement is egotism. It is the force that carries the struggler to the goal. He must believe in his ability—he must possess so much tenacity and courage that others become infected with his assurance. When he meets with disbelief and discouragement, his own faith has to support and sustain him. And such faith is only to be arrived at by training, just as the athlete's stride is the result of months of effort, and the hammer-thrower's form is the outcome of untiring practice.

Self-confidence is a moral muscle, which requires development. It is no different from any other thew and sinew—it can only grow strong through use. If you never try, no one will ever try for you. If you don't make a start no one will give you the impetus. The world is selfish—every individual is endeavoring to the best of his might to utilize his knowledge and experience and advantages to his own profit.

Only the ambitious achieve, and ambition, without initiative, is a useless possession. It has as much value as a gun without ammunition.

Big things are hard to get, otherwise they would have no value. Ground fruit is easier to pick than that on the tree but if it were sound it wouldn't be so low. What is not difficult to secure can be just as readily gotten by everybody else. The little posts are always hardest to hold because they require so little ability to maintain and the competition among men who can fill them is many times more intense than the striving higher up.

Contentment is rust—men who are satisfied with what they have done soon cease to be of value to themselves and to others. Every twenty-four hours produces a change in the art of doing things, and the self-complacent man content with his knowledge and his opportunity, soon becomes a back number—he stands still while things are moving forward.

Don't be afraid of risking your present position — if you possess enough ability to hold it, you can hold another. On the other hand, if you are not that capable, sooner or later some one better qualified to do what you are doing will get your place.

"He who is afraid to venture his bait will never fish"—if you believe that you possess the power to do better things than you are doing—if you think that you are gifted with capacity to fulfil greater responsibilities, you will stay where you are until the end. If you don't make the effort to climb to where you rightfully belong.

Suppose you do undergo a setback or two on the way to greater prosperity, if you're not willing to stand a scramble, you haven't grit and courage enough to hold on to things after you get them.

Every man who ever skinned up a tree had to slip down the trunk, time and time again until he caught on to the branches and pulled himself up. Every new swimmer keeps sinking until he finds how to use his arms and legs in water. A quitter never gets anything.

ARCHBISHOP MUST PAY DAMAGES

For Forbidding Use of Certain Text Books, French Courts Penalise Him.

Paris, Jan. 4.—The Court of Appeals to-day confirmed the decision of the civil tribunal at Rheims, which condemned Cardinal Ludovic Lucon, Archbishop of Rheims, to pay $100 damages to the Public School Teachers' Association.

The Cardinal was convicted on Feb. 25, 1910, of attempting to injure the Public Schools by signing an episcopal letter forbidding the use in the schools of certain text books to which the Church objected.

SEVENTEEN MET DEATH IN CHURCH

NEW YEAR'S RELIGIOUS CELEBRATION IN MEXICAN CITY ENDED IN HOLOCAUST.

More Than Eighty Hurt—Panic Followed Fire in Decoration of Moss—Victims Mostly Women and Children.

Mexico City, Jan. 4.—Fire and panic which occurred when a New Year religious celebration was in progress in a church on a hacienda, near San Luis Potosi, cost the lives of 17 and serious injury to more than 60 persons chiefly women and children. News of the disaster reached here to-day. The victims were workmen, employed on the Hacienda, and the members of their families.

The church, which was a small affair, was packed to its utmost capacity. In the course of the ceremonies, a candle fell from its socket and ignited a quantity of dry moss, with which the building was decorated.

The flames spread quickly. Of those who escaped death by burning or suffocation, many were killed or injured by being trampled in the frantic rush to escape through the narrow entrance.

HUNDREDS OF BUILDINGS DESTROYED IN THE CITY—HAS POPULATION OF 23,000.

The Shock Felt at Various Points Throughout Turkestan — Great Fissures Opened in the Ground.

Tashkend, Asiatic Russia, Jan. 4.—Hundreds of buildings were destroyed and many lives lost in a violent earthquake which practically destroyed Veryny, capital of Semicyetchensk, between 4 and 4.30 a.m. today. The loss of life is not known.

The shocks were felt at various points in Russian Turkestan. Great fissures were opened in the ground at Tashkend and buildings were damaged.

The population is in terror. Veryny has a population of 23,000.

Communication with the disturbed centres is interrupted and details are lacking.

OSCILLATION WAS VIOLENT.

London, Can. 4.—An earthquake of gigantic proportions was recorded by the seismograph at the observatory at West Bromwich between 11.35 o'clock last night and 3.58 o'clock this morning, apparently 3,000 or 4,000 miles eastward. The Oscillation was so violent that the needle of the instrument collapsed.

FIRST LOCAL O.H.A. GAME TO-MORROW NIGHT.

Lindsay "Midgets" Will Meet the Junior Peterborough Team Friday Night and a Lively Game is Assured.

The opening game of the O.H.A. league for Peterborough will be played here on Friday night between the Peterborough Juniors and the Lindsay Midgets, and on account of the way the Juniors handled their sticks at Cobourg, a pretty hot contest is expected.

In fact it is conceded that the present team is the fastest and best trained team of juniors that Peterborough has seen for a long time.

Whether premature or not, some enthusiasts has knick-named them the "Grillers" instead of the "Colts" The game will start at 8 p.m. sharp.

Must Hatch No More of Their Infamous Plots Under the British Flag

London, Jan. 4.—The charred and blackened body of "Peter the painter," leader of the gang of anarchists which yesterday tore out a red page of Russian terrorism and rewrote it in English blood, was dragged from the ruins of the Sydney street den to day while from all parts of England the press was calling upon the Government for the greatest and sternest crusade against foreign anarchists in the history of the country.

The police have secured further information which has established to a finality that the band headed by the two Russian terrorists, "Peter the painter" and "Dutch Fritz," were formulating the greatest international plot against Royalty in the history of modern civilization when the r of the Sydney street stronghold.

plans were cut short by death.

This plot is believed to have been aimed at King George and practically all of the Royalty of Europe who will be in attendance at the coronation ceremonies here next June.

This information has been given to King George and he, through official channels, is urging the police forward in the vast campaign.

A Russian woman taken prisoner in the anarchist stronghold before the battle began is believed to have betrayed secrets and plans of the gang involving scores of anarchists and it is upon her evidence that the campaign is being waged.

With the recovery of the body of "Peter the painter" to-day, three bodies had been taken from the ruins

Woman Would Stop The Vicious Traffic

Montreal, Jan 4.—Mrs. J. H. Roberts, wife of the secretary of the Dominion Alliance, and a prominent worker for moral reform, made a slashing denounciation of Montreal society women, and incidentally flayed Recorder Dupuis, for suggesting the segregation at a W.C.T.U. meeting yesterday. She said:

"In the name of the Christian womanhood of Montreal, I denounce Recorder Dupuis for his advocacy of the regulation of vice; I stigmatize his proposal to segregate the social evil, as immoral, and with that I say if a woman were recorder of Montreal the white slave traffic would not exist here for a month."

Mrs. Roberts declared that a regular white slave traffic existed in Montreal, and that there was an organization that attended to procuring girls. She blamed the success of this organization on Montreal society women, who did not pay their servants sufficient to keep them from a life of shame.

The speaker suggested that publishing of names and photos of men who were discovered in houses of ill-fame.

SWORM OF RODENTS KILL AN AGED MAN.

Emergency Hospital of Fort Worth City Jail Densely Populated by Rats.

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 31.—William Wiggins, an aged man, was found dead to-day in the Emergency Hospital of the city jail, killed by rats. One hand had been chewed off and the right eye torn out. He had died from loss of blood and exhaustion. The room in which the body was found gave evidence of a terrible struggle having taken place before the swarms of rodents overcame the old man.

At that Little jumped to his feet and shouted:

"I never slept with a nigger in my life!"

Johnson started for his ex-manager and the court interfered barely in time. Little withdrew the remark.

ALMOST ASPHYXIATED.

Mrs. Jas. Dickson, her mother and her daughter Ada, who reside at 321 Rogers street, Ashburnham, were nearly overcome by coal gas on Sunday evening. They sat up late expecting the arrival of Mrs. Dickson's son, W. Hunter and his wife, from Toronto.

Mrs. Dickson who was in the back parlor did not altogether lose consciousness as she heard her son ring the bell, but could not get up to let him in.

Mr. Hunter hurried round to the side entrance and entered. He immediately noticed the fumes of gas and hurriedly shut off the furnace, then summoned help.

Dr. Scott was called and applied restoratives. Mrs. Dickson and her daughter were soon revived, but her mother's condition was much more serious.

The Electric Merger Asked The Hydro-Electric to Keep Out

COMBINE OF POWER COMPANIES PLANNING MONOPOLY BETWEEN PETERBOROUGH AND TRENTON.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Commissioners Will Compete If Municipalities Desire it to do So.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—A merger of electrical companies, which was formed to operate in the district between Peterborough and Trenton, including Cobourg and other towns in the vicinity, has made overtures to the Hydro-Electric Commission for the purpose of securing a monopoly in the development and distribution of electrical power for that territory.

Needless to say the Commission has refused the request, and it appears probable that the Commission may be forced to enter into competition for the protection of some of the municipalities interested.

MERGER ASKS FOR MONOPOLY.

"They approached us some time ago for the purpose of securing an arrangement by which they would be left unmolested by the Commission, and pointed out to us that they had been granted charters by the Dominion Government which made it necessary for their rates to be approved by the Dominion Railway Board before they could be put into effect.

PUBLIC CONTROL vs. PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

"That, of course, is on the principle of public control, while the idea underlying the Hydro-Electric Commission is public ownership." The two systems may be put to the test in this district.

"Our reply to them was that we could not agree to anything of the kind, and that if the municipalities asked us to interfere we would do so. We are like the doctor; we don't go unless we are invited."

Already the Commission has been compelled to take action for, Mr. McNaught said, several of the municipalities have asked them to quote rates.

COMMISSION ASKS MERGER FOR RATES.

"We on our part have asked the merger to quote us rates at which they would supply us power to be furnished by us to the municipalities but so far have received no definite answer."

"Can the merger refuse to supply power to the Commission?"

"Oh, yes, and we have no right to expropriate as they have a Dominion incorporation."

"Are there any other powers in the district which the Commission could develope in case of refusal?"

"That I do not know.

It is possible that an offer may be made by the Commission to the merger to submit its rates to the Commission for approval.

TWELVE COMPANIES IN IT.

The combine is known as the Electric Power Company, Limited, and contains the following companies:

The Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited.

The Peterborough Radial Railway Company.

The Trenton Electric and Water Company, Limited.

She also received many costly and beautiful wedding gifts.

STARTED A ROW IN CHICAGO COURT

During Progress of a Suit Little Called Johnson a Nigger—The Diamond-Ring Suit Is On.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—Those persons who have hitherto imagined that Jack Johnson was some fighter, some prize fighter, must change their stand. He's not. He's a scientific boxer. Defending the much-talked-of diamond ring suit here to-day against George Little, the "Big Smoke" declared himself purely a scientific exponent of the manly art.

On the stand in Judge Goodnow's court Johnson nearly raised trouble when he said Little before their break had called him "Little Jackie" and referred to a time when he allowed Little was sleeping with him.

THE MORNING TIMES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5th, 1911.

AN EXCELLENT PLAN.

The Canadian Government Annuities system which was approved by unanimous vote of Parliament in 1908, and is available to everyone, present exceptional advantages to the young or middle-aged, who are able to save over a considerable period to secure for their declining years an income free from all possible danger of loss or diminution, and at the lowest possible cost. If the person has a lump sum saved up which he or she should apply on account of the purchase, the cost for the remaining years would be reduced to a greater or smaller extent. According to the amount which was paid in the lump sum. For example, a man of 35 wishing to purchase an Annuity of $300 at 60 and having $500 in the Savings Bank which he could apply on account of the purchase in a lump sum could then complete his contract for an annual payment of $38.82, while if the $500 had not been paid, he would have had to make an annual payment of $71.04. In the event of his death before 60, his heirs would of course receive back the $500 as well as the annual payments with 3 per cent. compound interest; and if he became an invalid or disabled so that he could not earn a livelihood, and the amount that he had paid in would yield him an income of $50 or more, he could draw his Annuity at his then age, though he were under 55 or 60. This points out the advantage to a man or woman who has been saving up for the years when they are unable longer to work, of immediately transferring any amount, which they can spare to their account for the purchase of an Annuity. The amount, if left in the Savings Bank at 3 per cent. would yield an income far short of the amount which might be required for their maintenance.

Information may be had at the Post Office, or of the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, of the plan you may adopt to make this provision.

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

the travellers found that their horses had benefited as greatly as they themselves by the food and brief rest.

They had no more adventures on the way. Winifred did not object to riding astride while it was dark, but she did not like the experience in broad daylight, and when they met an Eurasian in a tikka-gharry, or hired conveyance, in the environs of Euchnow she was almost as delighted to secure the vehicle as to learn that the city, though disturbed, was "quite safe from mutiny."

That was the man's phrase, and it was eloquent of faith in the genius of Henry Lawrence.

"Quite safe!" he assured them, though they had only escaped by a detachment of rebel cavalry by the merest fluke three hours earlier.

They were standing opposite the gate of a great walled enclosure known as the Alumbagh, a summer retreat built by an old nawab for a favorite wife. And that was in June! In six short months Havelock would be lying there in his grave, and men would be talking from pole to pole of the wondrous things done at Lucknow, both by those who held it and those who twice relieved it.

"Quite safe!"

It was high time men ceased to use that phrase in India.

CHAPTER VIII.

Wherein a Mohammedan Fraternizes With a Brahmin

"We seem to be attracting a fair share of attention," said Malcolm, as they crossed a bridge over the canal that bounded Lucknow on the south and east.

"We look rather odd, don't we?" asked Winifred, cheerfully. "Three mounted men leading four horses, and a dishevelled lady in a ramshackle vehicle like this, would draw the eyes of a mob anywhere. Thank goodness, though, the people appear to be quite peaceably inclined."

"Y-yes."

"Why do you agree so grudgingly?"

"Well, I have not been here before—are the streets usually so crowded at this hour?"

"Lucknow, like every other Indian city, is early astir. Perhaps they have heard of the fall of Cawnpore. It is one of the marvels of India how quickly news spreads. Isn't that so, uncle?"

"No man knows how rumor travels here," said Mr. Mayne. "It beats the telegraph. But the probability is that Lucknow has surprises in store for us. While we were bottled up in Bithoor things have been happening elsewhere."

His guess was only too accurate. Not only had Nana Sahib long been in treaty with the disaffected Oudh talukdars, but Lucknow itself was writhing in the first stages of rebellion. Although by popular reckoning the mutiny broke out at Meerut on May 10, there was trouble in Lucknow in April with the 48th Infantry, and again on May 3, when Lawrence's firm measures alone prevented the 17th Oudh Irregulars from murdering their officers. There was little reason to hope that this, the third city in India, should not yield readily to seditionmongers. The dethroned King of Oudh, with his courtiers and ministers, still maintained a sort of royal state in his residence at Calcutta, and his emissaries were active in the greased cartridge propaganda, telling Hindus that the paper wrappers were dipped in the fat of cows, while, for the benefit of Mohammedans, a variant of the story was supplied by the substitution of pig's lard.

It is believed, too, that the passing of a chupatty, or flat cake, from village to village in the Northwest Provinces early in January was set on foot by one of these agitators as a token that the Government was plotting to overthrow the religions of the people. The exact significance of that mysterious symbol has never been ascertained. Like the "snowball" petition of the West, once started, it soon lost its first meaning. Many natives regarded it merely as the fulfilment of a devotee's vow, but in the majority of instances it had an unsettling effect on the simple folk who received it, and this was precisely what its originator desired.

Lucknow was not only the natural pivot of a rich agricultural district, but it hummed with prosperous trade. Every type of Indian humanity gathered in its narrow streets and lofty houses, and excitement rose to fever heat when the local trouble with the sepoys was given force to by the isolation of the Meerut white garrison, the seizure of Delhi and the sacking of many European stations in the Northwest. On May 30, the 71st Native Infantry had the impudence to fire on the 32nd Foot, and were severely mauled for their pains. They ran off, but not until they had murdered Brigadier-General Handscombe and Lieutenant Grant, one of their own officers. The standard of the Prophet was raised in the bazaar and a fanatical mob rallied round it. They killed a Mr. Meapes, who lived in the city, and were then dispersed by the police.

Unfortunately the 7th Cavalry deserted when Lawrence marched to the race-course next day to punish the mutinous sepoys who had gathered there. But despite the lack of a mounted force, a number of prisoners were taken and hanged in batches on a gallows erected on the Muchee Bhowun, a fortress palace situated near the Residency.

Thus Lawrence had scotched the snake, but like Wheeler at Cawnpore and many another in India at that time, he refused to kill it by disarming the native regiments under his command. Nevertheless they feared him. They dared not show their fangs in Lucknow. They stole away in companies and squadrons, glutting their predatory instincts by slaughter and pillage elsewhere before they headed for Delhi or joined one of the numerous pretenders who sprang into being in emulation of Nana Sahib. It was one of these rebel detachments that passed the four fugitives from Cawnpore on the outskirts of Runnee. Scattered throughout the province they proved as merciless and terrible to wealthy natives as to the Europeans whom they met in flight along the main roads.

The chaos into which the whole country fell with such extraordinary swiftness is demonstrated by the varying treatment meted out to different

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here; Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $9000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neeve St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 300 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,035 oz. of gold and 1,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneflete Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1908, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $30,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 120,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

ABANDONMENT OF ARMAMENTS.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald has the following reference to an incident at the International Conference at the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes: There was a burst of enthusiasm just before the afternoon session adjourned, caused by informal remarks made by Dr. Eliot, of Harvard, and Justice William Renwick Riddell, of the High Court of Ontario, advocating the immediate abandonment of armaments by the United States on the Great Lakes. The discussion arose when John A. Stewart, of New York, called attention to the celebration planned for 1914 in commemoration of the centenary anniversary of the treaty of Ghent and one hundred years of peace. Dr. Eliot suggested that the date be shifted to 1917, so as to celebrate the first proposal, in 1817, by Canada for the removal of armaments on the Great Lakes. He was immediately followed by Justice Riddell, who read a letter from the Centenary Association of Toronto, urging that the United States might see fit to add to the celebration the permanent relinquishment of arms on the Great Lakes.

RAISE MORE HORSES

George B. Hulme Says There Is Money in This Industry

When George B. Hulme, the noted horse judge, was in Winnipeg recently placing the ribbons on choice animals in many of the horse classes, says The Farmers' Advocate, he took advantage of an opportunity at the stock luncheon to tell farmers of the Canadian West that they should go in extensively for raising hordes of all kinds, including army remounts. "In Western Canada," he said, "you have the best climate in the world, and an abundance of food and water that the horse wants."

This is just what many others who are in a position to speak with authority have said. Feed can be produced in abundance at low cost; for the most part the water is satisfactory; the climate is such that with reasonable care horse flesh is developed to perfection.

In spite of these facts, it is remarkable how few farmers really try to raise enough horses to increase their annual cash returns. Some will not be bothered with colts around the place; others consider that there is a chance that after they have paid the stallion service fee the foal will die. They have a sort of holy horror of anything that entails more risk than the growing of wheat. But there are men in the prairie provinces who are making money from breeding mares of the proper type—and they are becoming more numerous year by year. They have realized that it should not be necessary to bring thousands of dray and farm horses from the East every year. They have found out that there is profit in a horse at three or four years when he can be exchanged for cash totalling almost as many hundred dollars.

The horse raising industry is worth considering.

WINTERING FARM HORSES

How to Keep Idle Horses Cheaply in the Winter

There are three or four methods of wintering farm horses. Some turn out the idle horse and let them "rustle," some winter them in protected yards and others winter in the stable. Horses that will not be required to work from freeze-up in the fall till seeding begins in spring can be wintered as well outside as in, and more cheaply. If given a protected yard into which a liberal supply of oat straw has been blown, they will come through the winter in as good shape or better than horses that have been closely confined and fed liberally on grain. An idle horse given plenty of good straw, some prairie hay, a few oat sheaves and water can be wintered in the yard at a minimum cost in labor and feed. Nature provides a heavy coat of hair, so the horse does not suffer any from the cold.

Horses wintered should have all the straw and rough fodder they will eat. Oat is the best straw. Corn stalks are an excellent feed for horses thus wintered. With oat straw and some hay no grain is required. Six weeks before spring work opens, light grain feeding should begin.

Colts may be wintered in the same way, but it is preferable to stable the weanling the first winter. Two colts in a box stall are company for each other, and if fed the usual rough fodder ration, and what oats they will clean up, do better than foals that rustle in the yard.—Farmers' Advocate.

CELERY HAS RUST

There will likely be a shortage in the celery crop this year. The recent storms have brought with them a rust known by growers as a celery disease, and it is playing havoc with the celery. Local growers claim that it was brought by the storms of the past month or so. The first sign noticeable is when the leaves turn red in spots. This gradually spreads over the leaves until they wither and decay. Then it strikes the roots of the celery and the root and stalks rot and die. Local dealers say that growers throughout the whole country are being bothered.—St. Thomas Journal.

FINE HORSES FOR CANADA

Nearly 1,000 horses have made the transatlantic voyage to the St. Lawrence this year. Mostly Hackneys and Clydesdales, the animals are to be distributed in a dozen different cities and towns throughout the Dominion. Mr. Robert Ness, of Howick, is the owner of twelve of the animals. Forty-four of the ponies are going to Mr. Sinton, of Regina, while Mr. Bogue is taking fifteen more to the West. All are bred from high-grade British stock and their coming will be welcomed by horsemen throughout Canada.

ORIGIN OF "GO TO BLAZES"

When Mr. Bodkin applied for the Bishop Blaize public-house, England, to be closed, he remarked to the chairman (Mr. R. Wallace, K.C.): "You may have heard of the ejaculation: 'Go to blazes!'"

"Yes" answered Mr. Wallace, "I think I have."

"Well," said Mr. Bodkin, "the origin of the expression is what the Bench seem to think it is. There was a Bishop Blaize and when anyone wanted advice it was the custom to say, 'Go to Blaizes.'" (Laughter.)

MONEY IN CLOVER SEED

Mr. Arnold, of Kent Bridge, last year threshed eighty-five bushels of alsike clover seed off fifteen acres and sold it for $6.40 per bushel, making $544.

GIVE THE FOWLS PLENTY OF GRIT

The Only Way to Protect Their Digestive Organs—The Right Kind to Use

Unless fowls are provided with grit of a suitable kind, a great amount of extra work is thrown upon the digestive organs, which in time become overworked and consequently debilitated.

The gizzard of a fowl is the main organ by which its food is ground into a digestible state, but this organ cannot itself properly perform the necessary function of grinding such food as hard grain. It requires assistance in the form of hard and sharp particles of grit. These particles, mixing with the food, and being continually kept on the move by the action of the gizzard, pulverize such food and render it into a proper state for nourishing the fowl's system. When one handles an emaciated fowl, as likely as not one handles a bird that has been deprived of the necessary aid to digestion in the form of sharp grit.

Many poultry-keepers imagine very wrongly that fowls can find for themselves all the grit they require, especially if the birds are running at large on by-ways, upon runs composed of ashes, or where there are shallow streams with gravelly bottoms. But road grit is generally too small for the fowls' requirements; ashes are too soft to be classed as grinding material, while the small round pebbles picked up out of the beds of shallow streams are too smooth to perform the work of grinding properly.

While ashes are of little use as a grinding agent they are excellent for the fowls to scratch about in, containing as they do a certain amount of lime, which provides the laying hens with material wherewith to shell their eggs.

Kind of Grit Needed

It is impossible to keep fowls—and by fowls I mean all classes of domesticated poultry—in a healthy condition and in profitable lay for any length of time unless they are provided with grit of a suitable nature both as an aid to digestion and in shelling their eggs, and for this purpose good flint grit must be chosen.

Many kinds of grit, good, bad and indifferent, are advertised for sale among poultry-keepers. Many samples are too large for the ordinary-sized fowls, some are too small, and others are composed of the wrong materials.

The grit intended for ordinary-sized fowls should not be larger than small peas, and those for turkeys not larger than good sized peas, while for bantams they should equal split peas or lentils in size. Chicken grits intended for birds up to 6 months old should resemble in size Indian corn or millet seeds.

Forms Egg Shells

In addition to the sharp grit essential for digestion, laying hens require grit which Nature, such as old mortar, crushed oyster shells, or they will be unable to properly shell their eggs. It is true that the foods fed to fowls contains lime salts but in far too small a quantity to provide for the needs of a laying hen, and unless the balance can be made up from other sources the bird is liable to produce thin-shelled or shell-less eggs.

Shell-less eggs, when accidentally broken, offer a tempting meal to any fowls that see them, and such fowls are apt to acquire the egg-eating habit. Lime in some form should therefore be kept within easy reach of laying fowls, so that they can partake of it as nature demands. Crushed oyster shells form the best kind of shell-making material, and as they can generally be got for the asking from oyster sellers, they should be secured if possible, and turned to good account for the fowls.

YOUNG POULTRY.

Keep Reducing the Stock as Much as Possible

By all means keep reducing the young stock as much as possible. Sell the cockerels that show no sign of quality till off, as they need a lot of food to keep up to the standard and at the present time, when food is so dear, it does not pay to feed birds that are only of killing value. Separate if possible the weaklings, and thin force for three weeks, which will add flesh and weight and greatly increase the price. If breeding for exhibition and only the best are needed, do not be afraid to clear out the undesirables. It is against the wishes of most breeders to sell or kill any that may lay eggs, but unless the range is unlimited the crowding of the ground by poor stock is fatal from the first. That man is most successful who goes through his birds carefully, selecting those required for show, and then clears the rest off at once. The wise breeder has had a bad season, for wet weather plays havoc with young runs that are uncovered, and the wet matter produced soon breeds disease. Few and good is better than many of moderate quality.

HOW TO KEEP CUT FLOWERS

Choose flowers that are not quite fully out and cut them early in the morning, with four inch stems. Arrange them not too close together in a vase deep enough to immerse two-thirds of the stems. By previously putting some pieces of charcoal in the vase the water can be changed every five or six days. Keep the vase always full of water. Keep the flowers in a cool but not draughty place. Certain flowers do much better if a small portion of the stem is cut off, especially if they have been carried a long way, and a certain number are benefited for slicing the stems up, so as to allow them absorb the water more freely. This is especially so with flowers which are apt to go off quickly.—Gardening Illustrated.

Changes at Local Theatre.

Mr. M. Pappas, proprietor of the Royal and Princess Theatres, yesterday let the contract for changes at the latter place of amusement. Owing to the great increase of patronage extended to the Princess, under the management of Mr. Loftus, the seating capacity of that theatre has recently been altogether inadequate to accommodate the crowds buying admission. This morning the stage will be torn out, the scenery consigned to memories of the past and the drop curtain on which are thrown the pictures, removed some eighteen feet to the rear, that is to the west. This will permit many more seats being added to the theatre.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise oearning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen. one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

Police Say That the Anarchists Aimed to Destroy Four Kings

KING GEORGE, THE KAISER, THE CZAR AND KING ALFONSO WERE THE MONARCH'S LIFES SOUGHT.

Parliament Will Take Hand in Expulsion of All Foreign Criminals —Was Sydney Street Gang Connected With American "Reds."

London, Jan. 5.—The British Secret Service and Scotland Yard are making desperate efforts to-day to connect the anarchists who perished in their Sydney street stronghold in Tuesday's battle and their followers in London with American "reds." Cipher cablegrams have passed between England and United States in the search which has now become International in its scope.

One police theory is that a great international band of terrorists exists, possibly with headquarters somewhere in the United States, which has been masking crimes under the guise of anarchy and living off the gains of robbery, murder and other crimes.

WERE THEY THE MEN.

The theory of Scotland Yard connecting Americans with the dead anarchists is that the men shot to death in London's desperate battle may be the men who are wanted in Boston, Philadelphia and other cities for jewelry and other robberies, aggregating nearly $55,000.

It is believed that they are the same that robbed the store of Samuel Ullman, a Boston jeweller, last March, securing $18,000 worth of booty. According to advices from the United States the men wanted there went under the names of Harry Rothstein, alias "Kavok the blacksmith," Jacob Goldberg, alias "Red" Tracey and George Goldberg.

CANADA TO BECOME CENTRE OF EMPIRE

Sir Frederick Young Thinks Controlling Government May be Removed to the Dominion.

London, Jan. 5.—Sir Frederick Young, Vice-President of the Royal Colonial Institute, and a veteran advocate of Imperial unity, tells the Morning Post that some people believe Canada will so develop eventually as to become the centre of the Empire. If this belief is realized, he sees no objection to the removal of the controlling government to the Dominion, and would be as content under Sir Wilfrid Laurier as under Mr. Asquith or Mr. Balfour. He further says the unfortunate Imperial conference meets with little sympathy from the Government in power.

LOOKS OUT FOR RAINY DAY.

King George I. Sits Fast on Wobbly Throne.

Copenhagen, Jan. 5.—King George I., the former Danish Prince who has surprised every one by sitting fast on the wobbly throne of Greece these forty-seven years past, came nearer to being born on Christmas day than any other of the sovereigns of Europe. December 24, 1845, is generally accepted as the date of his birth. But the records of the royal family of Denmark show that the hour of his advent into this mundane sphere was almost simultaneous with the birth of Christmas Day in 1845 and the late King Christian and Queen Louise were often heard to refer him as their Christmas present.

King George apparently has never forgotten the days of his youth, when his parents who had not yet been called to the Danish throne, were notoriously poor. At sixty-five years of age the King of Greece finds himself among the very wealthiest members of the European royalty. His reputation for thrift is such, in fact, that it has been said he still has the first money which came to him after his accession to the throne of Greece in 1863. However this may be, it is certain that he has managed to save a tidy sum each year out of his civil list. Much of his savings has been safely invested in realty, while the remainder has been used by the monarch in speculating on the Paris Bourse, in which he has been eminently successful. In recent years he has invested large sums in American securities.

It is an open secret that King George, were it not for consideration of the members of his family, would welcome a political upheaval in Greece such as recently deprived the young king of Portugal of his throne. Many times during the last quarter of a century the king of the Hellenes has been reported on the point of abdicting. That he undoubtedly experts such an event to occur sooner or latter is evidenced by the careful preparations he has made for the future. Practically his entire fortune has been invested outside of Greece, and only within the past month or so he has concluded the purchase of two magnificent estates in Demark, evidently to be used for his own residence when the time comes for him to finally quit Athens.

MR. JOHN CRANE ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION LAST NIGHT

His Address Suggests An Aggressive Policy This Year in the Way of Much Needed Improvements to School Buildings---Some Schools are Over Crowded---Committees Appointed

The Board of Education for 1911 met in inaugural session last night. There were present, T. H. Adams, Col. Miller, Dr. Morrison, Robert Fair, L. M. Hayes, W. H. Hill, Vincent Eastwood, John Crane, B. F. Ackerman and Dr. Burnham.

The only new member is Vincent Eastwood, who was, however, a School Trustee four years ago.

Chairman L. M. Hayes having resigned the chairmanship he had held the past two years, the Board proceeded to elect his successor by ballot, without nomination.

Mr. John Crane is the Board's choice as chairman for 1910 and 1911. For some years past it has been the Board of Education's custom to retain its chairman in office at least two years.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

In accepting the chairmanship, Mr. Crane suggested an active policy for this year that will include much needed improvements to the East and West Ward Schools. He said that he appreciated most highly the honor conferred upon him, and hoped his occupancy of the chair would meet with the same acceptance as had the services of his illustrious predecessors. He had no fear for the educational future of Peterborough when he sees around the Board associated with him, men of experience and marked ability, who had done so much for the city in which they reside. Continuing, he characterized the Collegiate Institute and Public School staffs as splendid teaching bodies, presided over by exceedingly capable principals. As chairman of the Supervision Committee, he had noticed with pleasure the remarkable esprit de corps in the teaching staff. Dissensions had been very rare indeed, and the work carried on in an efficient and harmonious manner. He would, however, offer a number of suggestions that might well be taken into earnest consideration. The West and the East Ward Schools, for instance, did not seem to be properly served from a sanitary standpoint; in those buildings there are no modern conveniences, and ventilation is poor. Such conditions are a hardship to scholars, especially so to those children who enjoy every convenience at home. He hoped the Board would see fit to take those questions up this year. Then the old cribbing at the Central school is very much of a menace and an accident will undoubtedly occur there one of these days if it is not attended to. The heating system at the old Collegiate Institute is unquestionably worn out, and needs renewing: "I am told that in the morning, seats and desks are coated with dust from the furnace, and this dust must be exceedingly unhealthy for children to inhale. The King Edward and East Ward Schools are overcrowded—quite congested in fact; and while the finishing of and bringing into commission, the upper storey of the King Edward building will relieve the pressure there, no other rooms are available in the East Ward school. This matter I hope to see gone into fully this year, and likewise the questions of medical supervision, and domestic science, and manual training for the South Ward."

Chairman Crane's address was received with warm approval.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Messrs. Hill, Hayes, Ackerman and Dr. Morrison and Dr. Burnham were appointed a committee to strike the standing committees for 1911. Their report, recommending the following committees, was adopted:

Finance—Messrs. Ackerman, Eastwood, Adams and Dr. Morrison—B. F. Ackerman, chairman.

Supervision — Messrs. Morrison, Hayes, Burnham and Hill—Dr. Morrison, chairman.

Property—Messrs. Fair, Miller, Ackerman and Adams—Robert Fair, chairman. (Mr. Fair was chairman last year).

Committee on Appointments—The whole Board—W. H. Hill, chairman. (Mr. Hill was chairman last year.)

The chairman here welcomed Mr. Vincent Eastwood as a member of the Board.

Mr. Eastwood in reply, said it was a great pleasure to him to be again honored by the ratepayers. He had exceedingly pleasant reminiscences of past services on the Board, and was pleased to meet in some present members, men who had been his colleagues four years ago. Vested in the Board of Education are important interests, involving questions which are growing more intricate as the city's population increases. He hoped to be of some service to the Board the coming two years, during which time he looked for a continued advancement in Peterborough's educational systems.

THE EARTHQUAKE STRICKEN AREA COVERS ONE THOUSAND MILES.

Whole Villages Completely Wiped Out—Thousands of Soldiers Rushed to Scene, to Aid in Relief Measures.

Tashmend, Asiatic Russia, Jan. 5.—Two thousand soldiers, accoutred for relief work, were to-day rushed into the earthquake stricken territory of Semiryetchensk, Turkestan, where fully 2,000 are now reported to have been killed or wounded in a terrific and devastating tremors which lasted all day yesterday. Practically 1,000 square miles of territory are said to have been ravaged with whole towns wiped out and wide fissures in the steppes growing hourly.

Reports from towns and villages on the edges of the death belt, whither refugees fled in great numbers during the night, stated to-day that conditions in the interior of the devastated zone are terrifying beyond description.

TOWN REPORTED IN RUINS.

A big detachment of troops was ordered to hurry at all possible speed from the Tashmend barracks, towards Vyerny, a fortified town of 23,000 inhabitants, which is reported wholly in ruins.

At Kopal a great section of the town lies in ruins to-day, according to the meagre reports. Communication was practically cut off to-day from the interior of the earthquake zone no definite word came at all.

In the Sirke desert east of Kopal, and upon the vast steppes stretching along the mountains, hundreds of the members of Turkestan tribes are said to have been swallowed up by the earth.

Two Priests Victims of College Fire at Granby

Granby, Quebec., Jan. 5.—Rev. Brother Louciere, Assistant Superior was burned to death and the lives of thirty-two pupils and twenty-nine instructors imperilled when the fire of last night destroyed St. Joseph's College here.

Brother Louciere had aroused his charges and had piloted them to safety, and then was seen framed in smoke and flames in an upper window, but almost instantly toppled back into the fire.

Rev. Brother Daniels, Superior of the College, jumped from an upper window and was seriously injured. He may die as his back is broken.

All the pupils and other instructors escaped either by jumping from the windows or rushing down stairways. The loss is estimated at $90,000, with an insurance of $70,000.

The pupils who remained at the College during the holidays were from Spain, Cuba and United States. One Cuban was planning to leave for New York this morning, but had lost all his belongings and $300 in money.

Plumbers were at work in the College building until ten o'clock last evening, and they say that they left everything all right.

OFF TO CHINA.

Sister of Miss McCalla of the Y.M.C.A. Enters Mission Work.

It will be of interest to the many friends of Miss McCalla that one of her sisters, Mrs. W. C. Ratcliffe has entered the Chinese Mission field according to the following dispatch:

A party of Presbyterian missionaries are leaving for the foreign field on January 5th. Rev. A. H. Barker sails with his wife for Corea. Their home is in the Province of Quebec. There will be besides Mr. and Mrs. Barker, Miss Margaret I. McIntosh, who is returning to Honan from her third furlough, Miss Marie Sloane, of London, who is going to take charge of a school of missionaries' children, and Mrs. W. C. Ratcliffe, sister of Mrs. W. Harvey Grant, who is a nurse, and will also engage in educational work, and Miss Lily Adair, of Three Rivers, who is going to Formosa, where Miss Clazie arrived several months ago.

KNOCKED DOWN AND ROBBED.

About seven o'clock as Mr. Lasure was on his way home. He was overtaken by some person and stepped aside to allow the person to pass him on the sidewalk. Instead of this he was struck violently on the head from behind and lost consciousness. When found he was in rather bad shape and later discovered that he had lost the sum of twenty dollars. His assailant is not known.

WHOLE FAMILIES WED EACH OTHER

Eight Morens Married Eight Rheaumes—Great Gathering of Cousins.

Quebec, Jan. 4.—A very rare case of relationship was noticed yesterday at the celebration of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Moren, of St. Marie De Labeauce. Among the guests were eight of the old couple's children, who are married to eight children of Mr. and Mrs. J. Rheaume. The consequence is that there was never so great a gathering of cousins in the parish.

ULCERS AND SORES.

Cannot Resist Zam-Buk's Healing Power.

An illustration of the way in which Zam-Buk cures even the most serious and chronic cases of ulcers, eruptions and sores is provided by Mr. R. H. Barker, of Glencairn, Ont. He says:

"I would not have believed that any remedy could cure so quickly, and at the same time so effectively, as Zam-Buk cured me.

"My face began to be covered with a kind of rash, which itched and irritated. This rash then turned to sores, which discharged freely and began to spread. I first tried one thing and then another, but nothing seemed to do me any good, and the eruption got worse and worse, until my face was just covered with running sores.

"Apart from the pain (which was very bad), my face was such a terrible sight that I was not fit to go out. This was my state, when some one advised me to try Zam-Buk. I got a supply, and, marvellous as it may sound, within little under a month every sore on my face was healed. I was so amazed that I have told the facts to several persons, and I have no objection to your stating my experience for the benefit of others."

Zam-Buk is purely herbal in composition and is the ideal balm for babies and young children, for whose tender skin coarse ointments are so dangerous.

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, eczema, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

A RECORD YEAR.

The Imperial Life's Excellent Statement Reflects Countries' Prosperity.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—The prosperity which has prevailed generally throughout the country during the past year is being reflected in a striking manner in the annual statements of our large financial and commercial concerns. A noteworthy example is that of the Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada, whose preliminary statement for the year ended December 31st, 1910, shows that the results of the company's operations in 1910 surpassed in every important particular those of any previous year in its history.

The new assurances effected and policies revived amounted to $6,500,000, and exceeded by over a million dollars the company's best record in any one year. The total business in force now exceeds $30,000,000. During the year the assets were increased by over $600,000 and now stands at $6,147,000; the income from premiums and interest amounted to over $1,370,000, an increase of $165,000. A new record was also made in the amount of surplus earnings, out of which profits to policyholders are paid, the net surplus over and above all liabilities, including policy reserves, now amounting to over $770,000. It is also noted that the death losses were again below those which were to be expected according to the standard tables of mortality.

The rate of interest realized on the company's funds was 6.52 per cent., an increase of .40 over that earned in 1909. This favorable rate is due to the fact that about 65 per cent. of the company's assets consist of first mortgages on improved farm lands in Western Canada.

The policyholders and others having interest in this strong, progressive Canadian company are to be congratulated upon the marked success which has uniformly characterised its operations, and especially the success of the year just closed.

Mr. W. G. Morrow, who is a director of the Imperial, states that the business at the Peterboro agency, during the past year, was satisfactory and prospects point to a greatly increased business in 1911.

HEAVY FINES ON THREE RAILWAYS

Fined Forty Thousand Dollars Each for Rebating—All Three Will Appeal.

Philadelphia, Jan. 4.—Judge Holland, in the U.S. District Court today, inflicted fines of $40,000 each on the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., and the Bethlehem Steel Co., charged with unlawful rebating.

The Government was the prosecutor, the charge being that the railroads remitted demurrage charges on freight cars used by the Steel Co.

The defendants announce that they will appeal the case to the Supreme Court.

"EXEMPTIONS"

To the Editor of The Times,—

Sir,—Will you let me add a word or two to what your correspondent said yesterday about the elections. That word is "exemptions." Where are the Councillors who supported exemptions, and where are those who believed in a square deal for all citizens, and voted against them? It is well known that some of our Catholic fellow-citizens voted against exemptions. There is no good charging bigotry or Orangeism. There are actually not twenty Orange voters in the Centre Ward. What was it upset Mr. Phelan, then? Exemptions. It is hard for some of these gentlemen to realize that they are wrong, or that the electors in their sober senses could vote against them. It is a fact, however. Apart altogether from the growing intensity of the coming holy war between Faith and Reason, which is no doubt casting a shadow before, like all other coming events. The last election was a condemnation of those who betrayed the interests of the city for the benefit of a Church for the Church owns the property and houses a number of societies in it. There is no merit in that over and above other societies. Don't cry bigotry. There's no truth in it. But if you want to find it, look another way, where the only-onlys live. Away with all exemptions.

Yours.

ELECTOR.

Brazilian City is an Armed Camp

Para, Brazil, Jan. 5.—The city is an armed camp to-day with machine guns planted in the streets and the plazas filled with the temporary cantonments of regular soldiers who have been ordered here to quell a revolutionary outbreak.

Five are dead and at least 50 are wounded as the result of a regiment of cavalry charging a mob in the streets late yesterday, dispersing them with volleys from their carbines and the vigorous use of their sabres.

TROOPS TO SCENE.

Additional troops were rushed from Rio Janeiro to-day and heavy guards were placed about the Federal buildings, and rapid fire guns placed upon the roofs.

Several Brazilian men-of-war lie in the harbor and the crews to-day are threatening to take sides with the revolutionists and shell the city.

MERCHANTMEN LEAVE.

Foreign Merchantmen, fearing that this threat would be put into effect, weighed anchor and left the harbor. Business is practically dead and the authorities posted a proclamation declaring the city temporarily under martial law.

THE MORNING TIMES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6th, 1911.

THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The talk of bringing the Duke of Connaught to Canada is renewed. Though it is probably due to a sort of Royalist or Cavalier sentiment, it is really revolutionary in its character. Once the step is taken it will be difficult to retrace; and we ought to "think once, think twice, think thrice" before the precedent of selecting the Governor-General from the Royal family is set.

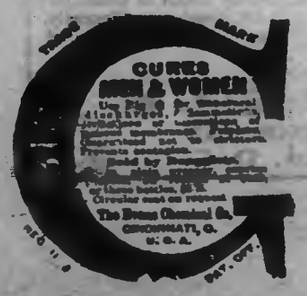
Such a custom would seriously change the relation between the Governor-General and the Canadian Ministers. A weak Ministry might give undue weight to the opinions of a Royal personage. On the other hand if a strong Ministry asserted itself against him, the conflict would be made acute and embarrassing by the nearness of the Governor-General to the Throne.

Our Governor-General is in the habit of making speeches on all sorts of subjects. They are freely and fairly criticized, like the speeches of other public men. The Duke of Connaught and his royal successors will either have to allow themselves less latitude or else their speeches will be regarded by a good many people as oracles. Should a Prince make a slip, or run counter to public sentiment there will be a tendency to silence criticism by an awe-stricken murmur of "Hush." This is not desirable. We respect our Governors, but we do not want their heads surrounded by halos.

Royalty requires a court. The establishment of a court would be distinctly injurious to Canada. It ple with social ambitions, and in would swell the heads of foolish peo crease the tendency to extravagance and ostentation. Ottawa, as the capital of Canada, ought to be regarded by the people of Canada as a place for the transaction of serious business, where the rights of the people are considered in a steady light, not in a blaze of fireworks. We should promote the dignity of Parliaments, we should treat public men with respect, but we should discourage any addition to ornament and ceremony. Members of Parliament should have their eyes turned toward the people rather than Rideau Hall. No institution in Ottawa should be allowed to overshadow "the grand inquest of the nation."

THE IROQUOIS MEMORIAL.

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 30.—The Iroquois Memorial Emergency Hospital, erected as a permanent memorial to the 600 victims of the Iroquois Theatre fire, will be formally turned over to the city today on the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the terrible holocaust. The hospital was built with funds raised by the Iroquois Memorial Association. The equipment and furnishings was paid for by the city. The building is a four-storey structure located in the heart of the business section. It will be operated as an emergency hospital, receiving emergency cases and victims of accidents in downtown districts.



THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

people. Winifred and her uncle, under Malcolm's bold leadership, reached Lucknow with comparative ease. Poor little Sophy Christian, aged three, having lost her mother in the massacre of Sitapore, was taken off into the jungle by Sir Mountstuart Jackson, his sister Madeline, a young officer named Burnes, and Surgeon Merton. They fell in with Captain and Mrs. Philip Orr and their party of refugees from Aurungabad, and the whole party experienced almost incredible sufferings during nine months. Mrs. Orr, her little girl and Miss Jackson did not escape from the cruel prison at Lucknow until the relief of March, 1858. Sophy Christian, who was always asking pathetically "when mamsie didn't come," died of the hardships she had to endure, while the rebels were shot in cold blood by the sepoys on November 14.

Yet in many instances the rebels either told their officers to go away or escorted them to the nearest European station, while the villagers, though usually hostile, sometimes treated the luckless sahib-log with genuine kindness and sympathy.

Mr. Mayne of course had his own house in the cantonment, which was situated north of the city, across the river Goomtee. Malcolm wished to see uncle and niece safely established in their bungalow before he reported himself at the Residency, but the older man thought they should all go straight to the Chief Commissioner and tell him what had happened at Cawnpore.

Threading the packed bazaar towards the Bailey Guard—that gate of the Residency which was destined to become for ever famous—they encountered Captain Gould Weston, the local Superintendent of Police, and his first words undeceived them as to the true position of affairs.

"You left Cawnpore last night!" he cried. "Then you were amazingly lucky. Wheeler has just telegraphed that he expects to be invested by the rebels to-day. Not that you will be much better off here in some respects as we are all living in the Residency. I suppose you know your house has gone, Mayne?"

"Gone! Do you mean that it is destroyed?"

"Burnt to the ground. There is hardly a building left in the cantonment."

"But what were the troops doing? At any rate, you are not besieged here yet."

"We are on the verge of it. Unfortunately the chief won't bring himself to disarm the sepoys, and the city is drifting into a worse condition daily. Half of the native corps have bolted, and the rest are ripe for trouble at the first opportunity. The fires are the work of incendiaries. We have caught and hanged a few, but they are swarming everywhere."

"You say Wheeler has been in communication with you this morning," said the perplexed civilian. "Are you sure? It is true we escaped in the first instance from Bithoor, but Cawnpore was in flames last night and the Magazine in possession of the mutineers."

"Oh, yes. We know that. The one thing these black rascals don't understand is the importance of cutting the telegraph wires. Wheeler has thrown up an entrenchment in the middle of the maidan. I am afraid he is in a tight place, as he is asking for help which we cannot send. Well, good-by! Hope to see you at tiffin. Miss Mayne must make herself as comfortable as she can in the women's quarters, and pray, like the rest of us, that this storm may soon blow over."

He rode off, followed by an escort of mounted police. Malcolm, who had taken no part in the conversation, listened to Weston's words with a sinking heart. He had failed doubly, then, in the mission entrusted to him by Colvin. Not only were dis despatches lost, but he was mistaken in believing that the Cawnpore garrison was overpowered. He had turned back at a moment when he should have strained every nerve to reach his destination. That was intolerable. The memory of the hawk-nosed, steel-eyed officer who rode from Kurnaul to Meerut in twenty-four hours smote him like a whip. Would Hodson—the man who was prepared to cross the infernal regions if duty called—would he have quitted Cawnpore without making sure that Sir Hugh Wheeler was dead or a prisoner?

The answer to that unspoken question brought such a look of pain to Frank's face that Winifred, watching him from the carriage window, wondered what was wrong. She, too, had heard the policeman's statement and was greatly relieved by it. Why should her lover be so perturbed, she wondered? Was it not good news that the English in Cawnpore were at least endeavoring to hold Nana Sahib at bay? It was on the tip of her tongue to ask what sudden cloud had fallen on him when the carriage swung through a gateway and she found herself inside the Residency. The breathless greetings exchanged between herself and many of her friends among the ladies of the garrison drove from her mind the misery she had seen in Frank's stern-set features. But the thought recurred to her later and she spoke of it.

Now Malcolm had already visited Sir Henry Lawrence and told him the exact circumstances. The Chief Commissioner exonerated him from any blame and, as a temporary matter, appointed him an extra A.D.C. on his staff. But the sore rankled, and it was destined in due time to affect the young officer's fortunes in the most unexpected way.

Above all else he did not want Winifred to know that solicitude in her behalf had drawn him from the path of duty. So he fenced with her sympathetic inquiries, and she, womanlike, began to search for some shortcoming on her own part to account for her lover's gloom. Thus, not a rift, but an absence of full and complete understanding, existed between them, and each was conscious of it, though Malcolm alone knew its cause.

But that little cloud only darkened their own small world. Around them was the clash of arms and the din of preparation for the "fortnight's siege" which Lawrence thought the Residency might withstand if held resolutely! In truth, there never was a fortification, with the exception of that four-foot mud wall at Cawnpore, less cal-

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $9000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neeve St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Mairs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayafleta, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,900 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $35,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—That the great steel magnate is sincere in many of his endowments is quite plain.

Andrew Carnegie has never made quite so profound an impression upon the world as he has in his latest endowment of $10,000,000 for the promotion of international peace. Yet it is but a natural step forward in the career of such a man. It is owing to him that there is at the Hague a House of Peace which he built and gave to the Hague Tribunal, the cost of it being about $1,500,000.

The peace which prevails between countries in the Western Hemisphere save only the occasional bickerings of a few rival dictators, tyrants, political nuisances generally, indicates the extent to which a friendly spirit exists throughout this half of the world.

It was in view of the endless advantages of such a condition that Mr. Carnegie was led to see the value of the Pan-American bureau, formerly the Bureau of American Republics and, in order to make that work permanent as well as to convey his everlasting blessing upon it, he built the superb home of the Bureau in Washington at a cost to himself of about a million.

Thus it may be seen that the latest act of Mr. Carnegie in the pursuit of the world's peace is but a more splendid one than usual; that is all. He has built a home for the International Tribunal and a home for the Pan-American also. Now he establishes the fund that shall be devoted under the best intelligence that is available to the purpose of peace, because peace is the natural condition of mankind and the one thing essential to the prosperity and happiness of nations.

It may be a source of regret to many that it should be necessary still to preach the gospel of peace after 20 centuries since the event of the Prince of Peace, but facts are faces, human nature is a stubborn thing of slow progress towards excellence and it will be a long time before war and its horrors are banished from the earth. Meanwhile, all concerted effort to that end that is conducted intelligently must certainly have the blessing of Heaven.

EXCLUDE WASTERS

Practically Worthless Birds Should be Got Rid Of

It is extremely important to give birds that are destined to be the future breeding stock as much freedom as possible, in order to develop fully those qualities that are so essential a factor towards success. This can only be accomplished when the ground is not overcrowded nor the birds cramped in their roosting quarters. It is quite impossible to say just how much space is necessary to maintain fowls healthy and strong, since so much depends upon the variety, the nature of the soil, the time of year, and several other considerations. The health and general fitness of the birds are the only satisfactory guide. Those who have plenty of space at their command need not perhaps trouble themselves about the matter although they would be ill advised to do so, but to those whose space is limited this question is one of great importance. I have often found often such a small poultry yard greatly overstocked, with the inevitable result that none of the birds were thriving well. Had half the number been kept in all probability the actual, not the proportional, supply of eggs would have been greater. In very many cases quite half the stock consisted of practically worthless birds, which were consuming food, occupying space, and involving labor, and thus reducing the profitableness of the remaining fowls.

There are several ways of classifying fowls, but there is none so useful as by means of their economic qualities. In this manner we have four great classes, namely, the fancy breeds, the table breeds, the laying breeds, and the general purpose breeds. Fancy fowls are those which are bred and selected for their outward characteristics, such as feather markings, comb, wattles, shape, etc. Such birds may or may not possess good economic qualities; as a rule the internal characteristics have been sacrificed for the external. Table birds are those which possess a large breast development and flesh of an excellent flavor and texture, but generally speaking they are comparatively poor layers. The laying breeds, on the other hand, are very prolific, but possess poor edible qualities, while the general purpose fowls are those which combine both laying and table properties. They are better table fowls than the laying breeds, but produce fewer eggs, while they lay more eggs than do the table varieties, but they possess inferior edible qualities.

SNAKES AND TOADS

Should Not All be Killed—Of Value on Farm

The French town authorities post village bulletin boards, for public instruction. One of these reads:—"Hedgehog; lives upon mice, snails and wireworms—do not kill a hedgehog. Toad; helps agriculture, devours twenty to thirty insects every hour—do not kill a toad. Cockchafer; a deadly enemy to the farmer; lays one hundred eggs at a time—kill the cockchafer." It would be a good idea for our own Government to post bulletins of this sort, instead of printing so many for circulation.

In the south most of the snakes are of great value, and that is relatively true everywhere. The blue racer, a handsome fellow, is estimated to be worth ten dollars a year to destroy mice and gophers. The bull snake and garter snake destroy insects and rodents without themselves hurting the garden. In my Clinton ground we have so long protected the little garter snake that he suns himself on the compost piles without fearing us at all. Why not?—E. D. Powell, in September Outing.

PORK FROM CHINA

Pacific Ports in United States are Receiving Frozen Porkers'

Pork from the Orient is now finding a place on Pacific coast markets in America. The scarcity of the domestic supply and attendant high prices have made possible such importation. Frozen porkers from China are an innovation in American pork markets, but are said to possess profit possibilities for the importer under present conditions. One can easily understand how pork production in the Celestial empire can be condducted at a minimum of expense. Cheap production accounts for the possible competition with the American producer. It is not likely, however, that this new source of pork supply will have any noticeable effect on domestic conditions, relative to either market supply or prices.—The Farmers' Review.

AN OPEN-AIR BARBER

Paris, like Pekin, has its ambulant barber. Armed with a little box, containing the necessary apparatus—razor, badger brush, soap, scissors, and serviette—he exercises his calling on the banks of the Seine. All the bargees, navvies and quay laborers are his clients. "Figaro" seats his patient on the pavement, covers his knees with a newspaper, and for a sou shaves, cuts his hair, and gives a human appearance to the tramps and others who entrust themselves to his care. But the wet season has not been favorable to the peripatetic barber, and with a sad countenance he avers that he has had a bad time

DIFFERENT NOTES OF CUCKOOS

Recently I observed the difference in the calls of two cuckoos answering each other, and, although it is generally held that only the male bird utters the call from which the name is derived I became convinced that the more highly pitched "cuckoo" was uttered by the female. I watched the two birds together for about fifteen minutes as they chased each other from tree to tree, in love rather than in anger, and during this time I frequently heard the well-known rippling note of the female.—"The Hospital."

STABLES BETTER COLD THAN DAMP

One of the First Requirements of a Horse or Cattle Stable is a System of Ventilation

No kind of live stock can thrive and do well in ill-lighted, poorly aired buildings. One of the first requirements in a stable is that it should be well provided with windows and have means for letting fresh air in and foul air out. Neither of these requirements are difficult to fill. Sunlight and fresh air cost nothing, and the expense of getting a sufficiency of each in the stable is no greater than that to which some stable builders go to keep these two health essentials out. The first care should be to have the stable light. Sunlight is Nature's most effective germicide; the next, to get the fresh air in. Fresh air contains the vitalizing oxygen that the blood takes up through the tiny cells of the lungs every time an animal breathes.

To get light in is not so difficult, but to provide for the taking out of foul air and the getting in of fresh is regarded by some as a problem of some difficulty. Elaborate systems of ventilation have been built into farm stables, and some of the simpler of them work satisfactorily. The system invented by Professor King has worked well under a wide variety of conditions. It is probably the most useful of the more elaborate systems. However, lack of ventilation cannot be excused on the ground that the system necessary for effective work is too costly and difficult to install. Cotton or duck tacked onto the window frames will let in and diffuse abundance of outside air, as well in horse or cattle stables as it does in poultry houses. The curtain system of ventilation has disadvantages, so has the open window method, or ventilation by means of holes in the ceiling or walls, but is a long ways ahead of nothing at all. Because one cannot afford, or does not understand the construction of the more complicated system, is not reason why simpler methods should be neglected. Every one building a stable this fall or with an old stable that is damp and foul and dark when the stock are in it in winter, should arrange now to have these defects remedied. A horse or cattle stable is better a little cold than damp.—Winnipeg Farmers' Advocate.

CARE OF MILK

The Ontario Department of Agriculture Issues Some Advice

Much effort has been properly put forth to secure the production of milk under cleanly and satisfactory conditions. That this may not fall of its purpose it requires to be supplemented by an equally thorough campaign of education among consumers. Millions of gallons of fairly good milk are contaminated with deleterious and disease-producting bacteria in the households where it is used. From a little circular, distributed with the compliments of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, the following pointers are taken:

"As soon as the milk is received put it in a cool place, away from the rays of the sun and not exposed to the heat of the kitchen or dining-room. If the bottle is to be placed in a refrigerator or near food products, the outside should be thoroughly wiped and rinsed, thus preventing contamination of the surrounding air and foods from the street dust and other dirt which may adhere to the bottle. Leave the milk in the bottle and the cap on, until such time as it is required for use.

"It is well to have a separate compartment in your cupboard or refrigerator for milk and butter.

"When the milk is placed in an open vessel, it is well to cover it with a clean, damp cloth. Several thicknesses of cotton, wrung out of cold water, will answer the purpose. This will not only protect it from dust, but will also assist in keeping the milk cold.

"All vessels intended for milk should be sterilized (scalded with boiling water), and thoroughly cooled fast before being used.

"Do not disturb the milk, or pour it from one vessel to another more often than is necessary. It is well to keep your milk in one medium-sized vessel, rather than a number of small vessels.

"Milk delivered at different times should not be mixed.

"Left-overs should be kept by themselves, and used before the fresh supply is drawn upon.

"If milk is to be kept until the following day, and there is a likelihood of it souring, pasteurize by placing in a double boiler and heating to near the boiling point (170 to 180 degrees F.). Cool as quickly as possible after it has been pasteurized. Always rinse thoroughly the cap and top part of the bottle before removing the cap.

"Open vessels containing milk should not be exposed to foul odors or produce which will flavor the milk.

"To clean milk vessels, first rinse with water, which may be slightly warm, but not hot. Then wash thoroughly with water containing a washing compound, scald, and allow to drain and dry.

"Thoroughly wash milk bottles before returning them to your dealer."

SEA BATHING

To bathe before breakfast is never free from risk, and sometimes seriously injures weakly subjects; for after the long fast of the night the circulatory and central nervous organs are more liable to depression from sudden shock or over-fatigue. On the other hand, to bathe soon after a meal arrests the process of digestion and may give rise to unpleasant gastric and cerebral symptoms. The best results are obtained from bathing two or three hours after the early morning meal, when the stomach is nearly empty, and there should be an interval of rest between the bath and the following meal.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

INDIAN RIVER

The snow being deep and the weather keen does not prevent the ramblers from travelling.

Mr. Joseph and William O'Leary are visiting Rev. Father O'Leary, of Mooloo of Mooller.

The ratepayers of S. S. No. 1, Douro, are to be congratulated on the manner on which they conducted their recent meeting, having transacted so much and such important business in a short length of time. This exhibits but slightly the business abilities and genousness of the level headed trustees.

Mr. A. Whibbe, L.L.D., a graduate of the Lee Institute, handled the books according to the Lee method.

The many friends of Mr. William Fitz are pleased to learn that he is able to be around again.

Mr. Jacob Andrews is busy for the last few days shoveling frost off the cupolo of the Indian River Cheese factory.

Mr. Harking Andrews son and heir to his estate, has returned home.

Mr. J. Isadore Laundergan, the shining light among the farmers of Indian River, has thought out a new method of settling disputes.

Indian River was the scene of much excitement on Thursday last, when an unknown youth, returning from a hunting expedition, was obliged to remain in the village for some hours owing to bad train connection. Entering the store of Mr. W. Kidd with whom he held a conversation for some time, his tone of voice and action aroused the suspicions of Walter, who phoned to the High County Constable of the Village. The latter was immediately upon the scene with his baton and pistol to defend the lives of his citizens at the risk of his own. Mr. Kidd, from an attic watched the combat with his field glass. To make a long story short, the stranger turned out to be a ratepayer of S.S. No. 1, Douro.

MOTHER AND SON FROZEN TO DEATH

TRAGEDY ON WESTERN PRAIRIE DUE TO HEAVY BLIZZARD TUESDAY NIGHT.

The Bodies Found To-day—The Mother Had Wrapped Her Cloak About mer Twelve-Year-Old Son.

North Portal, Sask., Jan. 6.—Frozen to death within a hundred and fifty yards of their home, the bodies of Mrs. Samuel Turner and her 12-year-old son were found by a search party this morning, the boy wrapped in his mother's cloak.

The two had been missing since Tuesday night, and from the finding of pails and a lantern it was concluded that they were returning from the stable when they lost their way in the blinding blizzard.

Nothing was known of their fate until Wednesday morning when Mrs. Turner's brother found the two other children of the family in the house shivering with the cold. A search was immediately instituted with Corp. Kemp, N.W.M.P. in command. So deep was the snow that the bodies were completely covered and it was not till this morning that they were located.

The stable is but a short distance from the house, and it is difficult for anyone who didn't experience the blizzard to understand how they lost their way. There is no means of finding out how far they travelled before they were overcome by the intense cold. They must have lost their bearings and wandered out on the prairie, there to find themselves bewildered. When they finally located their home they were so benumbed that they fell exhausted, a stone's throw from the door of their home.

When found, the boy was wrapped in his mother's cloak. They fell, or probably lay down together to protect themselves from the freezing blasts, but it proved beyond their strength.

STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE.

Chas. B. Parcels Missing—Left Home With $150.

Mr. Chas. B. Parcels, who resides about eight miles north of Havelock, left his home on December 7th, to visit his sister, Mrs. John Swain of Lindsay, and no trace of him has been ascertained since.

When he left home he took about $150 with him and expected to be away about three weeks. Not returning home when expected, Mrs. Parcels became alarmed and instituted enquiries about him and discovered that with the exception of his registering at the Munro House, Peterborough, on the evening of the 7th inst., all trace of him has been lost.

Mr. Parcels is about 50 years of age, is about six feet in height and weighs about 155 pounds. He is dark complexioned, very bald, and wore a long grey beard when he left home. He was dressed in a black suit with brown corduroy vest, wore a coonskin overcoat with a high-crowned black cap. His wife and family fear that he has met with foul play and of course are extremely anxious to obtain some tidings of him. There is no reason why he should disappear, as his home life was perfectly happy, and he is the owner of a first-class farm.

His mysterious disappearance has caused great alarm to his family and friends and detective agencies will be appealed to this week in an endeavor to throw some light on the case.

FAMOUS EXPERT TELLS

How Fat May be Removed Rapidly by a Simple Home Remedy Without Causing Wrinkles, Disturbing the Diet or Necessity for Exercise.

"Fat is nothing but unused energy" says a prominent physician, and the man or woman who is burdened with it can easily get rid of it if they wish. All they need is a ½ ounce of Marmola, ½ ounce of Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4½ ounces of peppermint water; all of which they can get at any drug store for a few cents. Then let them take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime until they are down to the weight they want to be.

This simple home receipt is far and away better than any or all the patent or secret medicines, for it reduces the fat safely and harmlessly. The ingredients are in fact beneficial to the system, having both tonic and purifying qualities, and so help rather than distress the stomach. The remedy does not cause wrinkles, for it reduces one gradually and naturally preserving good outline, and best of all, needs neither physical exercise to help it to do the work, nor does it require any change in diet—one can get results and still take things easy—eating meanwhile just what, when and how he or she pleases. Be sure and get the Marmola in a sealed package, so that you get Marmola, and not a substitute.

LICENSE FEES MAY INCREASE $100,000

Provincial Secretary Has Inspectors at Work Making Estimates of the Bar Trade—Graded Fees?

A considerable increase in the cost of liquor licenses in the province, it is understood, is looked for by the Provincial Secretary as a result of a graded call which may be adjusted this year over the Province. Last year there was about $575,000 paid in by the licensees and the total this year is expected to exceed $700,000 through a raise in the fees.

All over Ontario the inspectors have received instructions to send in a report on the approximate amount of business done over the bar.

Hewson, who were taken over the former post mortem examination by Mr. E. Guss Porter, of Belleville, chief counsel for the defence, and Mr. W. F. Kerr, Crown Attorney.

ENGLAND ALARMED OVER THE RUSSIAN-GERMAN ALLIANCE

THE TWO POWERS HAVE REACHED AN AGREEMENT REGARDING PERSIAN AFFAIRS.

And England is Alarmed—Germany is to Have the Preference in the Development of Asia Minor.

London, Jan. 6.—A new alliance with Russia and Germany working hand in hand, is alarming England to-day, according to the Evening Times, which publishes what purports to be the text of the Russian-German agreement regarding Persia. Under the terms of the document, Germany is to have the preference in the development of Asia Minor.

German capital is to be given the opportunity of financing the network of railroads which are to be constructed there. It had been understood that Russia and England were to work together in the construction of these improvements, and that in the partition of Persia, which it has been admitted for some time is sure to come, England was to get the lion's share of the territory.

In this connection, the Times says: "Unless secret reservations exist, which is not doubted, the compilation of this Russian-German agreement marks the breaking up of the triple entente composed of Russia, France and England. It has always been understood that Russia would never deal with Germany under any circumstances. Under the old understanding between Russia, France and England, it was understood that England was to construct and maintain the suggested railroad line from Bagdad to the Persian Gulf, and that French capital was to complete the road from Mesopotamia to the Mediterranean.

"There can be no question now that Germany has cut into the pie that the European situation is greatly complicated. With Germany and Russia working together, the balance of power is upset."

LINDSAY JUNIORS BADLY BEATEN

That the Peterborough Junior Hockey team is all that it was "tooted to be" by the wise ones was demonstrated to the fans last night when they witnessed the Grillers take the Junior Lindsay Midgets in to camp by the score of 16 to 3. The half-time score being 5 to 3.

The husky youngsters certainly handed out the brand of hockey that gives visions of championships hanging to their belts.

Last night's game was the opening one of the Junior O.H.A. here and a large crowd of spectators, including 120 from Lindsay were present. The local seven were much heavier than the Scugog septette, were superior in stick-handling and speedier on their skates.

The first half of the game was more closely contested than the last half. The Grillers started out with scoring the first two goals, followed by one for the visitors. The half time score being 5 to 3.

The second half was just a fusilade of shots on the Lindsay nets until the grand finale of 16 goals was reached and the whistle blew for full time.

For the locals every man played a strong game, with Heffernan, Coughlin, Hall and Sorel always in the lime light.

The ice was in spendid condition, and the locals served up some great combination, their team work being superior to that of the visitors.

The game was clean throughout. Referee Harvey Sproul of Toronto, being called upon to penalize but four players for minor offenses. Following is the line-up:

POLICE DID CALL IN THE SOLDIERS

Commissioner Did So Because Anarchists' Weapons Were Superior to Constables'

London, Jan. 6.—The inquest into the death of the two outlaws who were killed while resisting the police in their Sydney street home on Tuesday began to-day.

The testimony showed that soldiers were summoned by the Commissioner of Police because the anarchists' revolvers were superior to the weapons of the police, and that less than fifty police officers participated in the siege, the remainder being required to deal with the crowd.

Cruel Husband Gets Six Months and Will Receive the Lash.

Belleville, Jan. 5.—Edward Garrison, a middle-aged man residing in Elzevir Township, who is the father of nine children, was sentenced this morning, by Judge Deeroche, to six months in the Central Prison and to receive ten lashes, for an aggravated assault upon his wife and a young son. Garrison used his wife in a shameful manner by biting and beating her.

Whole Family of Indians were Starving to Death

Port Arthur, Jan. 6.—Left alone by her husband with five small children and nothing to eat but rabbits, which she had caught as best she could, a squaw was found on December 27, wandering around in a starving condition, while the temperature hovered between twenty and thirty degrees below zero, by contractor Mercier near his camp at Owl Creek, between Jackfish and Long Lake.

Mr. Mercier took her and the family to Jackfish, where another family of Indians took care of them.

On Monday night last, the husband of the woman arrived at Mr. Mercier's camp with both feet and both hands badly frozen, and nearly exhausted from starvation. He said he had had nothing to eat for seven days. His supply of matches had given out, and his clothing was quite insufficient to protect him from the cold. He was suffering intense pain, too, from a deep cut on the leg from the axe which he was carrying. It is not expected that the man will recover. The snow is over three feet deep in that section.

An Unknown Man Drowned at Port Hope

Port Hope, Jan. 6. An unknown man was drowned in the harbor at an early hour this morning. At about 1.30 James Elliott, night superintendent at Plant No. 1, of the Standard Ideal Co., heard cries for help coming from the harbor, and upon investigation, saw the form of a man in the darkness clinging to the ice near the freight warehouse. Before the spot could be reached the man disappeared. McMahon Bros. have been dragging for the body this morning, but as the current of the river is strong at this point, it has probably been carried out into the lake.

Big Sum Unclaimed by York Loan Shareholders

Toronto, Jan. 6.—Over five years after the York County Loan and Savings Co. went into liquidation here are still 10,000 shareholders who have made no application to the National Trust Co., liquidators, for the amount of their claim against the defunct company.

The winding up order was made on December 16th, 1905. At that time, or within two years afterwards, 124,000 shareholders sent in their pass books to claim the amount due them. An inspection of the books by the liquidators showed 25,000 shareholders with balances to their credit who had not sent in their books.

Day by day these pass books have trickled in. Not a week passes, but some come to hand. Yesterday one came from Toledo, Ohio. In the last three years, of the missing 25,000 books, 15,000 have come to hand. But there are still 10,000 shareholders with claims aggregating roughly $60,000, whose books have not been sent in. If these people now send in their pass books they will at once receive a cheque for the first dividend of 25 per cent.

The work of the liquidator has revealed the trek which is in steady progress from old Ontario to the West. The indications are that this is a serious menace to old Ontario, as in the case of thrifty farmers who deposited their savings with the York County Loan a great number have moved out to the prairies.

ADDRESSES NOT KNOWN.

Many have moved, leaving no trace of their whereabouts, and there are now in the hands of the liquidators 3,000 letters containing dividend cheques which have been returned undelivered. There were sent out to the best address on the files of the company, but have failed to locate the addressee. Those letters represent dividends aggregating $5,000, and may be had by the persons to whom they are addressed if their correct address is sent into the liquidators.

As illustrating the wide ramifications of the defunct company, cheques have been sent out to shareholders in Japan, in Sweden, and in Switzerland. It is stated that most of these claims originated in Winnipeg, where a large foreign population took advantage of the prospects offered by the York County Loan Co. These foreigners have gone back to their homes, and their dividend cheques must be sent after them.

The first dividend was paid on November 1st, 1909. The date of the assets are realized. It takes $750,000 to pay a dividend of 25 cents on the dollar, and although there is still the amount already in sight, it will be some months before it is realized. The second dividend, which it is hoped will be paid by the end of this year, will not be a final dividend, though how much more than 50 cents on the dollar will be paid altogether cannot yet be said.

Nine-tenths of the real estate has already been sold, there being about 5,500 feet still for sale. This, which has an estimated value of $150,000.

THESE DANCERS HAD SOME TIME

New York, Jan. 6.—Officials of the District Attorney's office began today an investigation into the transfer of a magnificent $508,000 country residence, near Riverhead, Long Island, to Dr. Louise Robinovitch, sister of Joseph G. Robin, the indicted banker.

Although this estate was never held in the name of Robin, it was his home for week-end parties, said to have been notorious for the freedom with which the guests disported themselves.

In the basement along with the billiard room and bowling alleys, Robin kept three wine cellars, each with a capacity of 10,000 quarts. These were kept filled.

According to Charles Janechen, the manager of the estate in 1908, Robin brought down automobile parties on Saturdays, remaining until Monday.

"The usual Saturday night crowd consisted of eight or ten persons, sometimes more," he said. "The women were usually from the Broadway choruses. After dinner there was dancing, the music being furnished by automatic pianos and music boxes. The dance usually ended on Sunday sometime. The nature of the dancing was unusual. It generally ended with the women standing on tables, trying to kick off the chandeliers. In the winter they often placed a phonograph on the porch, and each dancer, bearing aloft a glass of wine, tried to dance in the snow. They called these "snow dances." In the summer they often had "water dances" in the surf."

Driftwood Manor is half a mile from the road, and huge artificial mounds prevent anyone from seeing it. The manager of the estate had orders to show a shotgun to approaching trespassers.

Earthquake Dead May Reach 15,000

SCORES OF POPULATED CENTRES ARE DESTROYED WHOLLY OR IN PART.

River Channel Changed—Landslide of Rocks Dams Stream and Causes Lake to Form Over Ruins of Town.

Tashmend, Asiatic Russia, Jan. 6.—Reports reaching here to-day from Russia to the posts on the edge of the earthquake belt, where refugees have taken shelter, stated that the dead in Turkestan calamity may number 15,000. The relief columns of soldiers despatched to the scene have made little progress owing to the vast cracks in the earth, around which they have to make detours. It is believed that at least a score of populated communities have either been destroyed wholly or in part. New rivers have been formed by the upheaval of the earth.

The town of Prjevalsk, a community on the banks of Lake Issik-kul, is said to have been totally destroyed and many of its 10,000 inhabitants killed or wounded.

The channel of the part of the River Ghoo, which flows southward through the territory of Semitvetchensk, was changed by the earth tremors and towns along the [illegible] demolished.

TWO ELECTROCUTED

Men Who Murdered a Rent Collector Died To-day.

Dannemora, N.Y., Jan. 6.—Dominick Ferrara and Vincent Leonardo, young Italians from Albany, who murdered a rent collector at the behest of the Blackhand, went to the electric chair in Clinton prison this morning. Just before he was strapped in the electrodes, Leonardo made a confession which substantiated the evidence of the Italian detective, who had himself placed in a cell next to the accused men before their trial.

CARD OF THANKS

To the Editor of The Times.—

Sir,—I wish through the medium of your paper most cordially to thank all those who by their votes supported my nomination for Water Commissioner, and replaced me in the position I have had the honor to occupy during the past nine years. The result shows a mark of confidence in myself, which I certainly appreciate very highly; but what is of much more importance it applies confidence in the Board of Water Commissioners. The propriety of their conduct in relation to the construction of a new concrete dam and pumping station and the installation of a pumping plant was attacked, or rather what was less just, insinuation was made to the discredit of all the members of the Board. This the electors properly resented. Probably very few understand the continuous anxiety and strain the construction of this public work, the greatest and most expensive ever undertaken by the city, has been upon the Commissioners, nor the amount of time given by each member to it, particularly by the chairman, during the past eighteen months. The Commissioners have always thought it was wiser and in the best interests of the city that their worries and difficulties with contractors should be theirs only, than that the whole people should know from week to week what the Commissioners had to contend with. The end of their labours is now almost reached, and when the result is observed they feel, and justly they believe, that the city has now a pumping plant that for reliability for all time and for effectiveness is not surpassed in Canada. Everyone who takes an interest in the progress of the city, whether skilled or unskilled, is invited to visit the works. Criticism will then be in order, and the Commissioners are not afraid of the judgment placed upon their efforts. When the Commissioners pressed the necessity for construction of these works, upon the people, an assurance was made that no tax to pay the cost would be required on General Assessment, nor would there be any increase in the water rates, and the Commissioners see no reason now to change their attitude in these respects.

For the gentlemen who opposed me so strongly and so vigorously, I entertain the highest respect and my one regret is that my election necessarily involved his defeat.

Respectfully,
W. H. HILL.

FARMERS CRUELLY TREAT TWO BOYS

One Lad May Lose His Feet Through Having Them Frozen.

Chatham, Jan. 6.—Inspector Kinder of the Barnado Home, brought in two boys from two farms in Tilbury yesterday. One of the lads, thirteen years of age, had both his feet frozen and his back was covered with blue and red welts. The other lad also showed signs of abuse, but not nearly as much as the first one. It is feared that the boy with the frozen feet may have to have them amputated. It is likely that both the farmers for whom the lads worked, will have charges of cruelty to children laid against them.

THE MORNING TIMES

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7th, 1911.

THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Why should there be so much hesitation about the appointment of the next Governor-General of Canada? So far as this hesitation results in the prolongation of Earl Grey's stay, no one will complain. But why this reluctance to name his successor? Canada is not a difficult country to govern; as the misguided persons who appointed Governor Metcalfe imagined seventy years ago. We have got along very well with Governors appointed by Liberal and Conservative Governments—men who represent the sentiment of the United Kingdom as it veered from one party to the other. Now, why not give us a Governor who represents the sentiment of the United Kingdom of today, its humanitarian spirit, its awakened zeal for social reform?

The people of the United Kingdom elected a Liberal Government to power six years ago, and twice since they have approved of the policy and record of that Government. The Government is vested with full authority, and there is no reason why it should not assert its Liberalism in the appointment of a Governor-General of Canada. No one expects that the Governor-General shall take sides in our public questions in Canada. He is one of the links between the people of Canada and the people of the United Kingdom, and for that reason it is well that he should represent the prevailing sentiment of the people of the United Kingdom.

PROHIBITION IN NEW ZEALAND.

The war against the liquor traffic is taking a new form in the Dominion of New Zealand, and it is expected that the result will be either national or local prohibition, in forms which will lead the way for other sections of the Empire. A licensing bill now before the New Zealand Parliament contains these interesting provisions:

National prohibition is to be submitted as an issue at licensing polls; local no-license and national prohibition are to be carried be 55 per cent. of the votes (this perrentage, according to a later message, has been raised to 60 per cent.) national prohibition is to come into force four years after its adoption at a poll, and local prohibition one year after adoption. If national prohibition is carried the subsequent votes (every three years) will be on national restoration, the 55 (60) per cent. majority operating and liquors to be restored in three months, during national prohibition liquor is not to be imported, manufactured, or sold in New Zealand, shipping and "depots" within five miles of a licensed district are to be prohibited, there is no provision to prevent any increase in the existing number of licenses, the employment of barmaids is to be prohibited after June next, with certain exceptions; the age under which it is illegal to serve youths is to be extended to 21.

THE RED YEAR

—By—
LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED)

culated to repel the assault of a determined foe than the ill-planned defenses which provided the last British refuge in Oudh.

Winifred soon proved that she was of good metal. The alarms and excursions of the past three weeks were naturally trying to a girl born and bred in a quiet Devon village. But her deity, mostly blamed for the transmission of bad qualities, supplies good ones, too, whether in man or woman. Descended on her father's side from a race of soldiers and diplomats, her mother was a Yorkshire Trenholme, and it is said on Hambledon Moor that there were Trenholmes in Yorkshire before there was a king in England. In spite of the terrific heat and the discomfort of her new surroundings she made light of difficulties, found solace herself by cheering others, and quickly attained a prominent place in that small band of devoted women whose names will live until the story of Lucknow is forgotten.

She met Frank only occasionally and by chance, their days being full of work and striving. A smile, a few tender words, perhaps nothing more than a hurried wave of the hand in passing, constituted their love idyll. For Lawrence fell ill and his aides were kept busy, day and night, in passing to and fro between the bedside of the stricken leader and the many posts where his counsel was sought or the hasty provision of defense lagged for his orders.

The Chief was so worn out with anxiety and sleepless labor that on June 9 he delegated his authority to a provisional council. Then the impetuous and chivalric Martin Gubbins, Financial Commissioner of Oudh, saw a means of attaining by compromise that which he had vainly urged on Lawrence—he persuaded the commanding officers of the native regiments in Lucknow to tell their men to go home on furlough until November.

This was actually done, but Lawrence was so indignant when he heard of it that he dissolved the council on June 12 and sent Malcolm and other officers to recall the sepoys. Five hundred came back, vowing that they would stand by "Lar-rence-sahib Bahadur" till the last. They kept their word; they shared the danger and glory of the siege with the 32nd and the British Artillery.

Gubbins, a born firebrand, then pressed his superior to attack a rebel force that had gathered at the village of Chinhut, ten miles northeast of Lucknow. Unfortunately Lawrence yielded, marched out with seven hundred men, half of whom were Europeans, and was badly defeated, owing to the desertion of some native gunners at a critical moment.

A disastrous rout followed. Colonel Case, of the 32nd, trying vainly with his men to stop the native runaways, was shot dead. For three miles the enemy's horse artillery pelted the helpless troops with grape, and the massacre of every man in the small column was prevented only by the bravery of a tiny squadron of volunteer cavalry, which held a bridge until the harassed infantry were able to cross.

Lawrence, when the day was lost, rode back to prepare the hapless Europeans in the city for the hazard that now threatened. The investment of the Residency could not be prevented. It was a question whether the mutineers would not surge over it in triumph within the hour.

From the windows of the lofty building which gave its name to the cluster of houses within the walls, the despairing women saw their exhausted fellow-countrymen fighting a dogged rear-guard action against twenty times as many rebels. Some poor creatures, straining their eyes to find in the ranks of the survivors the husband they would never see again, clasped their children to their breasts and shrieked in agony. Others, like Lady Inglis, knelt and read the Litany. A few, and among them was Winifred, ran out with vessels full of water and tended the wants of the almost choking soldiers who were staggering to the shelter of the veranda.

She had seen Lawrence gallop to his quarters, and his drawn, haggard face told her the worst. He was accompanied by two staff officers, but Malcolm was not with him. The pandemonium that reigned everywhere for many minutes made it impossible that she should obtain any news of her lover's fate. While the soldiers were flocking through the narrow streets that flanked or enfiladed the walls, the native servants and coolies engaged on the defenses deserted en masse. The rebel artillery was beginning to batter the more exposed buildings; the British guns already in position took up the challenge; sepoys seized the adjoining houses and commenced a deadly musketry fire that was far more effective than the terrifying cannonade; and the men of the garrison who had not taken part in that fatal sortie rushed to their posts, determined to stem at all costs the imminent assault of the victorious mutineers.

An officer seeing Winifred carrying water to some men who were lying in a position that would soon be swept by two guns mounted near a bridge across the Goomtee, known as the Iron Bridge, ordered the soldiers to seek a safer refuge.

"And you, Miss Mayne, you must not remain here," he went on. "You will only lose your life, and we want brave women like you to live."

Winifred recognized him though his face was blackened with powder and grime. Her own wild imaginings made death seem preferable to the anguish of her belief that Frank had fallen.

"Oh, Captain Fulton," she said, "can you tell me what has become of—of Mr. Malcolm?"

"Yes," he said, summoning a gallant smile as an earnest of good news. "I heard the chief tell him to make the best of his way to Allahabad. That is the only quarter from which help can be expected, and to-day's disaster renders help imperative. Now, my dear child, don't take it to heart in that way. Malcolm will win through, never fear! He is just the man for such a task, and each mile he covers means—" he paused; a round shot crashed against a gable and brought down a chimney with a loud rattle of falling bricks—"means so many minutes less of this sort of thing."

But Winifred neither saw nor heard. Her eyes were blinded with tears, her

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $9000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neeve St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayaflete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Nictoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quarts in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $65,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to [illegible] fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the agricultural and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The experiment seems to demonstrate that the quantity of salt that can be used with the best result is 10 cwt. per acre.

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been obtained this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts [illegible] with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 345 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 88 pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough additional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

LEVEL COLT'S FEET

Properly Done, It Cures Wrong Tendencies and Prevents Resultant Injuries

The feet of foals frequently need levelling to prevent an abnormal development of the legs as a result of unequal wear of the hoofs. Many foals stand badly at first, and if they are slow in gaining a correct position of the legs the hoofs may become worn in such a way as to prevent a proper standing position or a straight form of action.

Levelling the feet acts both as prevention and cure. It prevents a breakage, or other cause of rapid wearing away of any part of the hoof from throwing the weight on the wrong part of the joints. Even if the foal is born with a natural tendency to stand wrong, as with the feet too wide apart or too close together or pigeon-toed, such a tendency may be gradually corrected in a large part by keeping the feet level. A colt that stands pigeon-toed, for example, wears off the outside wall of the hoof faster than the inside, and the more that condition develops the worse the tendency to stand wrong becomes. By rasping off the inner wall to correspond with or even slightly to exceed the wear of the other side, the foot will be thrown more nearly into line as it strikes the ground. While the leg bones and joints are growing they are susceptible to the persistent pressure from one angle or another and grow toward a correct position or away from it according to the condition of the feet.

A level foot induces the colt to assume a correct position of the leg. As an example of the marked effect of the pressure on the joints from shortening one wall or the other of the hoof, work horses with lameness and symptoms of spavin have frequently been made to go sound simply by taking half an inch off the inner wall of the hoof, thus throwing the concussion on to the outside of the hock joint. If colt's hoofs are kept fairly short at the toes, with the inner and outer walls of equal length, the foot will develop as nearly a correct shape as it can be induced to take and the limbs as well will be safe-guarded against deformity.

FIGHTING WEEDS

Plough as Early as Possible After the Crop is Removed

Summer fallowing is not necessary for the eradication of noxious weeds such as mustard, Canada thistle, curled dock and so forth. By plowing as early as possible after the crop is removed and cultivating frequently until the ground freezes, it is quite possible to free land from the weeds mentioned. The farm of one of our neighbors was badly infested with mustard, says J. R. Westlake, of Carleton County, Ontario. The former occupant, who had merely rented the farm, had failed to keep this pest in control, and it had practically driven him off the farm. When his successor and present owner (an Englishman by the way) took the farm we were all very interested in knowing how he would make out in the struggle for existence with the weeds.

His first grain crop could not be seen for mustard. This crop was not allowed to ripen, but was cut when green, and with careful curing made very fair winter feed. The land was plowed immediately, and, in the course of a week or so, was green again with a fine growth of mustard, thistles and many other weeds. When these were well started he disced the land thoroughly and let stand for a couple of weeks. The next growth of weeds was plowed under. He followed this up with alternate discing and plowing as long as the weeds continued to grow. By following this method combined with a rotation which contained a large amount of corn and roots, he has his farm practically clear of weeds.

Nor was the freeing of the farm from weeds the only benefit derived from this system of cultivation. The land was put in splendid shape for next year's crop. The large amount of cultivation and aeration made available a large supply of plant food. The large amount of vegetable matter in the form of weeds turned under, greatly increased the supply of humus in the soil with all its attendant benefits. Farmers who are carrying on what seems like a hopeless struggle with weeds, would do well to follow the example of our English neighbor and do more fall cultivation, combined with a large acreage of hoed crops.

THE MANURE HEAP

Never Allow Yourself to be Tempted to Dispose of It

So far as manure is concerned you should make it your business to keep your small holding self-supporting so far as possible. In these days of mechanical traction dung is becoming increasingly scarce, and though artificials are more used than ever, there will always be a demand for the invaluable farmyard refuse, which contains the nutritious properties for soil in such well-balanced quantities.

Still, though manure is such an important commodity, there is no need for it to intrude, and your stack may well be made up at some convenient point well away from the house. Here waste from the stable, pigsty, cowhouses and yards may be stored, and it should be packed closely so that it may "heat" and decompose.

Later on in the winter—preferably in frosty weather—the stuff may be carted on to the land and used, economically yet judiciously; the more rotten it is the better. Never be tempted to dispose of manure. It will probably be against the conditions of your tenancy, but whether or not, it is bad farming to let a load go.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skilful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. The Secret of Song-Writing.

A noted composer has said that a song, to make a hit, should "appeal to the heart." That's exactly what is giving great popularity to "The Land of the Beautiful Dream," words and music of which will be given free with next Sunday's New York World. This is the song now being sung by Truly Shattuck in "Alma, Where do you live," the play drawing crowds to Weber's Theatre, New York City. It's a song that "appeals to the heart."

Order next Sunday's New York World in advance and get a great newspaper and a great song at one and the same time.

Take Care of Your Eyes

If your eyeglasses or spectacles do not suit your eyes perfectly you are subjecting your eyes to a strain that may injure them seriously.

The lenses that were suited to your eyes three or four years ago may not be so to-day. Not because the lenses have suffered deterioration, but because people's eyes change as they grow older. If you cannot see as clearly or as far as you think you ought to do, the wisest thing to do is to consult an experienced optician. Mr. J. W. Browett, Doctor of Optics, Philadelphia, and an optical specialist has had twenty years experience, and his rooms are fitted up with the most modern devices for testing the eyes, enabling him to tell exactly what lenses are required. He keeps on hand also a large stock of glasses of every description at his rooms in the market building.

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

AT KNOX CHURCH.

Principal Gandier of Knox College, Toronto, Conducted the Services for the Rev. Mr. Keith.

There was a large congregation at Knox Church last night to hear Principal Gandier, of Knox College, Toronto, who conducted the service there and also preached in St. Paul's on Sunday morning.

He said his message was principally for the young men and young women present.

Young people often think of themselves too seriously and are what is called vain or conceited. Principal Gandier told them that those who did not take themselves seriously would not amount to much.

Young people are often thoughtless and though he would not have old heads on young shoulders he entreated them not to be careless with sin. He compared it to a snake in the grass, ready to pounce upon the unwary.

Any who heard Principal Gandier last night will not soon forget his masterly address.

BIG THINGS CONCERNING RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES LIKELY TO HAPPEN.

Daily Conferences to be Held—Earl Grey and Sir Wilfrid Laurier Invited to Cabinet Dinner.

Washington, Jan. 7.—With the arrival of Canadian cabinet ministers in Washington and even before the actual work of reciprocity making has begun, there are indications that the tariff agreement which it is hoped will be drawn will be of far wider scope and of much greater importance than ever has been attempted in a negotiation to which the United States has been a party.

It looks as if the Dominion officials mean business. It is certain that President Taft does. He certainly will meet them half way. The presence of the Canadian officials here makes direct negotiations possible under the most agreeable circumstances, and it safely can be said that "big things" concerning the relations of the two governments are likely to happen. If the time is ripe for Canada it surely is ripe for the United States.

CABINET DINNER.

Fully realizing the importance of the occasion President Taft has decided to usher in the great work with due ceremony. He has planned a "Cabinet Dinner" at the White House for Wednesday night and has sent special invitations by telegraph to Earl Grey and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the governor-general and Canadian Premier, respectively, to be present and join with members of the American and Canadian Cabinets who are to be the President's guests.

It is hoped that the telegraphed invitations may bring messages of acceptance, as they are issued because the president sincerely desires to have the two foremost Canadian officials present if possible, and the invitations are in no sense sent simply as a matter of form.

The Canadian cabinet ministers who doubtless will be present are Hon. W. S. Fielding, minister of finance; Hon. William Patterson, minister of customs; Hon. L. P. Brodeur, minister of marine and fisheries and Sir Allan B. Aylesworth, minister of justice.

DAILY CONFERENCES.

Mr. Fielding, accompanied by Mrs. Fielding and Miss Edith Fielding, arrived here last night and went direct to the Shoreham Hotel. They were preceded by Mr. and Mrs. Patterson and Messrs. J. A. Russell, H. V. Roorke and R. B. Viets, who are attaches of their staff. Mr. Fielding and Mr. Patterson are here to conduct reciprocity negotiations. They will have daily conferences with the secretary of state, Mr. Knox, who has given to the matter of Canadian reciprocity the closest personal attention.

A BUSINESS-LIKE FACTORY

Methods Followed With Success in a Berlin Institution

One of the neatest factories, from an interior study, to be seen anywhere in Canada, is the German Union Factory. This factory is not new, and as is frequently true in such cases the exterior is not particularly imposessing, but excellent cheese is made at it, nevertheless. In 1908, during the months of May, June, July and August, 139,359 pounds of cheese were made, in 1909, 174,612 pounds, and in 1910, 195,581 pounds, says the Farmer's Advocate.

The steady and marked growth in the output of this factory is attributable to several factors. Mr. Neeb, the maker, is reported to be one of the most efficient and painstaking men in the business; he has the confidence of the patrons and of the buyers. Verily, the fate of our cheese industry lies largely in the hands of our makers. Milk is paid for on the basis of per cent. fat, plus two. This system, while at first objected to by the patrons, has proved to be the fairest and most satisfactory method to practice. The whey is pasteurized and returned to the producers in proportion to the amount of milk delivered. Formerly the whey was paid for at the rate of $6.20 per ton of cheese, and fed at the factory. This did not return much money to the producers, while the presence of hog-feeding quarters near the factory did not prove desirable. Consequently, the plan now followed has improved conditions at the factory, has made more money for the milk producers, has brought many new patrons to the factory, and throughout has been approved. According to the secretary, R. J. Kerr, the cost of returning the whey has increased the cost of teaming only 9 cents per 1,000 pounds of milk.

Pasteurizing the whey costs very little; it has rendered the whey of higher feeding value, and decreased the likelihood of contamination by means of the milk cans. At this factory, besides having both the lower and upper whey tanks covered, and keeping them clean, a pipe and draw is provided to conduct off the surplus whey when such collects.

The German Union Factory, in the excellence of its maker, its sanitation, its pasteurization, and its pay-by-test method, may be taken as a model for all our factories to work towards.

Powers to Act to Stamp Out Anarchy

London, Jan. 7.—International action to stamp out anarchy will be it is predicted here, a development of the near future. To the average Londoner, intensely excited over the sensational fight on Tuesday at the Sydney street house, the suggestion is welcome.

He is convinced that something more is needed than ordinary police measures and the conventional criminal codes of modern states.

Expression is given today to the spreading sentiment by a forceful, but dispassionate writer who asks if all sensible men will not agree with him in thinking that altogether too little attention is paid by the great powers of Europe, America and Asia to the need and feasibility of concerted steps to stamp out enemies of order.

If the powers cannot arrange for concerted action, he argues, they might bring about simultaneous individual action to efface the "whole miserable brood of London's Peter the Painters" and Tokio Kotokus and Barcelona bomb hurlers, and Rome Mafia men, and New York and Chicago's Black hand pests.

In Paris where the prevailing view is that the duty of leadership in a campaign for international action against anarchy rests with France and the United States, because of their republican character, the point is made that "The mere existence of The Hague tribunal paves the way for indefinite multiplication of mutual defence measures."

Anti-Modernist Oath is Driving Catholics Outside Their Church

Clergymen Decline to Subscribe---King of Bavaria May Transfer His Allegiance To Another Body

Berlin, Jan. 7.—The imposition of the anti-modernist bath on the Catholic clergy of Germany is beginning to cause considerable trouble. This oath obliges all Catholic priests to declare their allegiance to the traditional dogmas and doctrines of the church, and to promise to teach only such doctrines to their flocks as are contained in the decisions of the Oecumenical councils—and recognized creeds.

From Munich it is reported that four professors of theology at the university of that city resigned their pastoral functions in order to escape taking the oath, that a Catholic clergyman has declined to take the oath, and that a professor has completely severed his connection with the church as a protest against the act on of the Papal Nuncio. The great majority, however, of the teaching staff of the faculty of Catholic theology have consented to give the required guarantee.

Rumors are afloat in Dresden that in the Catholic court circles the much chagrin is felt at the Vatican's treatment of Prince Max, and that the king especially is greatly irritated. It is even said that King Frederich August, never at any time an enthusiastic Catholic, is considering whether he should not transfer his allegiance to the church to which the vast majority of his subjects belong.

The Carnegie Trust Company Closes Doors

New York, Jan. 7.—The Carnegie Trust Company was closed this morning by direction of the state superintendent of banks, O. H. Cheney. It has a capital of $1,500,000 and deposits aggregating about $6,000,000. The institution was in serious trouble in the panic of 1907, and has never fully recovered. Its late president Mr. Dickenson, died last year under peculiar circumstances.

The suspension of the Trust Company was not unexpected in the financial district, and while the posting of a glowing notice on the door quickly brought a crowd of depositors and others, they gradually melted away, and there was little to indicate that the failure had taken place.

All the doors of the Trust Company with the exception of a small side entrance, were locked.

TWO MORE DIE IN WESTERN TOWN

M. B. Pondray and R. M. Lightner Were Frozen to Death Near the Naas River.

Vancouver, Jan. 7.—Word was received from Stewart B.C., late last night of the tragic death of two well known Victoria citizens, and the serious plight of a third, as the result of a blizzard, near the Naas River Valley.

The two who perished are Matthew B. Pondray and Robt. M. Lightnes, while the third Charles Gordon, is reported to have been seriously frozen and may die. The party represented Victoria interests, and had just completed the locating of a tract of land in the Naas Valley. The blizzard overtook them as they were crossing the Bear River Glacier. Pondray was connected with one of the oldest and best known families in Victoria.

Girl with Hair Ablaze Leaps from Window

Charlotte Powell is in a Critical Condition—Firemen Gave First Aid.

Toronto, Jan. 7.—While dressing in a room in the attic of her home, 190 Markham street, on Saturday afternoon, Miss Charlotte Powell caught on fire by her hair coming in contact with the flames of a lamp, and being unable to open the door, threw up the window and jumped to the ground, 25 feet below. The young lady was just recovering from a nervous illness, and became hysterical when the flames caught her hair and clothing.

The firemen administered the first aid applications of oil, etc., and Drs. C. H. Thomas and F. S. Moore were summoned. Miss Powell was badly burned about the head and arms, and sustained a fracture of the forearm, and several bruises as the result of the fall. She was removed to Grace Hospital in Miles ambulance. Her condition is critical.

MANUEL AND THE FRENCH DANCER

They Are Said to Have Been Enjoying London Life Together.

New York, Jan. 7.—According to a London cable Mlle. Gaby Deslys, the French dancer returned to Paris yesterday after three weeks' visit to England, during which time she was frequently in the company of former King Manuel of Portugal. The dancer came to London ostensibly to undergo a treatment for throat affection, and the length of her stay was publicly attributed to the fact that the first operation had been entirely successful. It was during the period of convalescence that she and the former king frequently dined together in fashionable hotels and restaurants but not in public dining rooms.

Mr. C. J. McKellican, Norwood, is in the city.

THE FARMERS' BANK FAILURE.

(From the Chicago News).

A Toronto Bank having thirty-one branches in Canada has closed its doors and hung out the "No Funds" sign for the benefit of the curious. We hope and trust that the confiding depositors will not lose a cent of money, not even a Canadian cent, the loss of which amounts to something at least in weight. But we can't help wondering how it happened. By conversing briefly with a resident of Canada one is led to the belief that so many safeguards are thrown about the small depositor in that cautious land that he couldn't lose his money if he were to deposit it in a well. Government police would be on his trail to dive into the water and rescue the roll. When the loyal Canadian hears of a bank failure or a wildcat mining scheme he shrugs his shoulders and looks upon his American friend in pity. Let us see if the depositors in the disposed to recline at ease, minus thirty-one Canadian banks will be their Christmas money, with the full confidence that the Government will hand them back dollar for dollar.

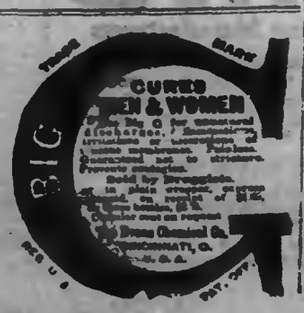
A STRONG ADDRESS.

Mr. Donald Macmaster, who practiced law in Montreal for many years, and who was counted amongst our most brilliant lawyers, entered the British House of Commons last January as Unionist members for the Northwestern or Chertsey Division of Surrey. He has been re-elected by acclamation. His address to the electors after the dissolution was a model of terse and effective political pleading. National safety and the Preservation of British Commerce he placed first in importance. He stood for the maintenance of the Constitution, "sane" fiscal regulations and reform of the land laws to enable tenant farmers to acquire small holdings in ownership, state aided if necessary. Mr. Macmaster sees the success of Mr. Wyndham's Land Purchase Act in Ireland, and looks for similar legislation in England. The address dealt at some length with the constitutional question and complained of the dissolution as being utterly unwarranted. The Parliament Bill was not passed when by the Commons and the Lords had no opportunity to discuss it. The charge that the Lords were blocking measures of legislation was said to be unfounded and unjust. Mr. Macmaster contrasted the vote proposals with the Rosebery plan for House of Lords reform, a policy endorsed by the Unionists. A few bitter flings at the Government for truckling to Mr. Redmond and his party of disunion concluded a document which for its clearness and definiteness is one of the most effective statements issued during the election.



THE RED YEAR

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED)

brain dazed by the knowledge that he lover had undertaken alone a journ declared impossible from the mo favorably situated station of Cawnp many days earlier.

She managed somehow to find h uncle. Perhaps Fulton spared a m ment to take her to him. She ne knew. When next her ordered mi appreciated her environment that la day of June, 1857, was drawing to close and the glare of rebel wa fires, heightened by the constant fla es of an unceasing bombardment, tol her that the siege of Lucknow had b gun.

Then she remembered that Mr Mayne had taken her to one of th cellars of the Residency in which th women and children were secure from the leaden hail that was beating o the walls. She had a vague notion that he carried a gun and a cartridg belt, and a new panic seized her lea the Moloch of war had devoured hei only relative, for her father had been killed at the battle of Alma, and her mother's death, three years later, had led to her sailing for India to tak charge of her uncle's household.

The woman near at hand were too sorrow-laden to give any real informa tion. They only knew that every man within the Residency walls, even the one-armed, one-legged, decrepit pen sioners who had lost limbs or health in the service of the Company, were mustered behind the frail defenses.

To a girl of her temperament in action was the least endurable o evils. Now that the shock of Mal colm's departure had passed she long ed to seek oblivion in work, while ex istence in that stifling underground atmosphere, with its dense crowd o heartbroken women and complaining children, was almost intolerable.

In defiance of orders—of which however, she was then ignorant—she went to the ground floor. Passing out into the darkness she crossed an open space to the hospital, and it chanced that the first person she encountered was Chumru, Malcolm's bearer.

The man's grim features changed their habitual scowl to a demoniac grin when he saw her.

"Oh, miss-sahib," he cried, "this meeting is my good fortune, for surely you can tell me where my sahib is?"

Winifred was not well versed in Hindustani, but she caught some of the words, and the contortions of Chumru's expressive countenance were familiar to her, as she had laughed many a time at Malcolm's recitals of his ill favored servant's undeserved repute as a villian of parts.

"Your sahib is gone to Allahabad," she managed to say before the thought came tardily that perhaps it was not wise to make known the Chief Commissioner's behests in this manner.

"To Illah-habad! Shade of Mahomet, how can he go that far without me?" exclaimed Chumru. "Who will cook his food and brush his clothes? Who will see to it that he is not robbed on the road by every thief that ever reared a chicken or milked a cow? I feared that some evil thing had befallen him, but this is worse than aught that entered my head."

All this was lost on Winifred. She imagined that the native was bewailing his master's certain death in striving to carry out a desperate mission, whereas he was really thinking that the most disturbing element about the sahib's journey was his own absence.

Seeing the distress in her face, Chumru was sure that she sympathized with his views.

"Never mind, miss-sahib," said he confidentially, "I will slip away now, steal a horse and follow him."

Without another word he hastened out of the building and left her wondering what he meant. She repeated the brief phrases, as well as she could recall them, to a Eurasian whom she found acting as a water-carrier.

This man translated Chumru's parting statement quite accurately, and when Mr. Mayne came at last from the Bailey Guard where he had been stationed until relieved after nightfall, he horrified her by telling her the truth—that it was a hundred chances to one against the unfortunate bearer's escape if he did really endeavor to break through the investing lines.

And indeed few men could have escaped from the entrenchment that night. Any one who climbed to the third story of the Residency—itself the highest building within the walls and standing on the most elevated site—would soon be dispossessed of the fantastic notion that any corner was left unguarded by the rebels. A few houses had been demolished by Lawrence's orders, it is true, but his deep respect for native ideas had left untouched the swarm of mosques and temples that stood between the Residency and the river.

"Spare their holy places!" he said, yet Mohammedan and Hindu did not scruple now to mask guns in the sacred enclosures and loop-hole the hallowed walls for musketry. On the city side, narrow lanes, lofty houses and strongly-built palaces offered secure protection to the besiegers. The British position was girt with the thousand gleams of a lightning more harmful than that devised by nature, for each spurt of flame meant that field-piece or rifle was sending some messenger of death into the tiny area over which floated the flag of England. Within this outer circle of fire was a lesser one; the garrison made up for lack of numbers by a fixed resolve to hold each post until every man fell. To modern ideas, the distance between these opposing rings was absurdly small. As the siege progressed besiegers and besieged actually came to know each other by sight. Even from the first they were seldom separated by more than the width of an ordinary street, and conversation was always maintained, the threats of the mutineers being countered by the scornful defiance of the defenders.

Nevertheless Chumru prevailed on Captain Weston to allow him to drop to the ground outside the Bailey Guard. The Police Superintendent, a commander who was now fighting his own corps, accepted the bearer's promise that if he were not killed or captured he would make the best of his way to Allahabad, and even if he did not find his master, tell the British officer in charge there of the plight of Lucknow.

Chumru, who had no knowledge of warfare beyond his recent experiences, was acquainted with the golden rule that the shorter the time spent as an

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $90000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neave St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Waynflete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety knowns as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $60,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

USES OF CEMENT ON THE FARM

Farmers Generally are Adopting It, For Things Built of It are Durable, Easily Kept Clean, and Proof Against Vermin

Cement can be used on the farm for a great variety of things.

Cement fence posts are coming into favor because of their strength, good appearance and great durability. Hitching posts and clothes' posts are made of the same material. And on some farms cement blocks are used for constructing the fence in front of the house. Because of being easily cleaned and not rotting, rusting or admitting vermin, cement tanks for water and grain find favor. Cisterns and wells, and the tops and covers of these are constructed of cement, and it is used also for making watering troughs, feeding troughs, and for slop tanks, in which to heat slop for cattle and prevent it from freezing.

Protection Against Rats

Cement box stalls are warmer in winter and cooler in summer than wooden stalls, and chicken houses built of cement afford much-needed protection against rats, weasels and other vermin, and are easily kept clean. Root cellars and feeding floors of cement also are not approved of by rats, those energetic pests that find it easy to live on the farm in summer, but will find it hard in winter if cement construction becomes general. Hog pens are built of cement and so are corn cribs.

Sidewalks, steps for porch and cellar and rain leaders and gutters are made of the same material, and other things made of it are dams, retaining walls, barn drains and land drains, cesspools, windmill foundations, dipping tanks, flower boxes and frames for hotbeds and coldbeds.

Cement is much used in connection with the dairy. Milk houses, ice boxes, and many other things are made of that material, the advantages of which are quite apparent in a place where cleanliness is so necessary. Cement is put to many and strange uses, one of the strangest being as filling for a tree cavity. Filling such a cavity prevents decay and gives a better appearance to the tree.

HEATING THE HOUSE

The Importance of Having Humidity in the Air

As far back as you can remember the use of the heating stove in your father's or grandfather's house, you will be able to recall the fact that a pan or kettle of water was always steaming on the stove. It kept the air in the room moistened or humidized and in effect made the warmth at once satisfying and agreeable.

Then the day of the warm air furnace came, and since then, with the exception of a few instances in which people have appreciated the value of humidity and have kept their furnace water pans supplied with hot water, we have been content with a hot, dry, enervating heat, which is destructive to both comfort and health.

Dry air will absorb moisture from every possible source, and when, by furnace heating, the humidity is almost entirely eliminated, the furniture and other wood fittings, the house plants, and even your own body, are levied upon to supply the deficiency, and, as a result, the furniture warps, the plants wither and die, and you lay yourself open to contract one of those severe colds, or worse, which you wonder how and where you caught. The average furnace water-pan is rather on the small side to supply the necessary moisture, but a new form of pan in the shape of a complete circle has been recently introduced with much success and promises to again give us the health-giving and agreeable humidized heat which our parents appreciated and enjoyed.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the forecourt of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

Watch for the birds' nests before you remove a dead tree. If you can save a nest of young birds spare the tree awhile. Birds destroy thousands of noxious weed seeds every year. They do much good in keeping down insect pests and noxious weeds.

RABIES, HYDROPHOBIA

A History of the Disease and How to Treat It

During the past year many cases of rabies have been reported in Canada, which have caused much loss of live stock, and, in several localities, people have been bitten.

This is one of the oldest diseases known. In the fourth century B. C. it was described by Aristotle, who wrote: "Dogs suffer from a madness which puts them in a state of fury, and all the animals that they bite when in this condition become also attacked by rabies."

The season of the year makes very little difference, as the disease is just as prevalent in winter as it is in summer. This seems contrary to the ideas of many people, who think that July and August, "dog days," are the only time that dogs are subject to rabies.

Cause

Rabies is caused in nearly all cases by the bite of a rabid animal. It is possible to contract the disease from the saliva, the tears from the eyes, or the milk of a rabid animal. The rabid dog is a source of danger a few days before the symptoms of the disease appear, but in no case before he was bitten by a rabid animal, or otherwise inoculated. Hot weather, lack of water or ill treatment will never in themselves produce rabies.

The dog is the principal source of which rabies is spread over the country.

Symptoms

The symptoms seldom develop in less than fourteen days after the animal was bitten—most commonly three to six weeks—but they may not show for six months to a year. Not all animals bitten develop the disease. It depends somewhat upon the part of the body which was bitten. In man there is less danger if bitten through the clothing than upon the bare parts of the body. It is not uncommon for the symptoms to develop in less than two weeks when bitten upon the head. The symptoms show in one of two forms—furious or dumb.

Furious Rabies

With the furious form the dog is at first noticed to seek the company of his master more than usual, or he will hunt dark, secluded places. Sometimes he will make sudden starts towards objects. These conditions last for a day or two. Later he becomes restless, and will often travel twenty to thirty miles in a day. While he is on this trip he is very likely to bite cattle, hogs, and dogs often passing horse and man, unless they interfere with his course. He will usually return home unless he is killed. During this period he is irritable, seldom eating or drinking, not because he does not want food or water, nor because he is afraid of water, for he is not, but from the fact that his throat is paralyzed and he cannot swallow. Often he will force sticks and stones down his throat in efforts to satisfy hunger and thirst. This period of irritation lasts for two to three days, followed by a period of paralysis, which has already taken place in the throat, as shown by the voice, which has already changed to a prolonged howl, and the inability to swallow. This is followed by paralysis and death, the entire symptoms lasting from four to ten days.

Dumb Rabies

The dog seeks his master's company, or may hide in dark places, being unable to eat or drink, the lower jaw hangs down and the tongue protrudes, which may swell and turn dark. This condition is followed by paralysis and death in four to ten days after the first symptoms appear.

Symptoms

Cattle are prone to chase chickens, dogs, and may run at a man, whom they are less apt to attack. Often falling down from no apparent cause, twitching of muscles, inability to eat, due to paralysis, often showing signs of sexual excitement even when pregnancy is well advanced, but seldom biting. These symptoms are followed by paralysis and death.

The horse is often more vicious than cattle, biting anything within reach, and shows many of the symptoms shown by cattle.

Diagnosis

This is made from microscopic examination of the brain, which shows small round or oval bodies from 1-30,000 to 1-1,000 of an inch in diameter. They have never been found unless the animal has been inoculated with rabies virus. There are also changes in the nervous ganglia in the last stage of rabies, but this manner of diagnosis is more uncertain and of little use in the early stages of the disease. Sticks and stones may be found in the stomach of a rabid dog.

Treatment

This consists of a preventative treatment (Pasteur), which must be taken before the symptoms have developed. In order to be effective it should be taken within a few days after having been bitten by a rabid animal. The treatment may also be given to valuable domestic animals.

NINE HEALTH COMMANDMENTS

1. Keep windows open day and night.
2. Do not spit.
3. Breathe through the nose by keeping the mouth shut.
4. Drink pure water.
5. Eat slowly, take well-cooked meals, and cultivate regular habits.
6. Wear loose clothing of seasonable material.
7. Take regular open-air exercise, in sunshine if possible.
8. Wash the whole body at least once a week.
9. Work but do not worry.

A balanced ration is just as essential for poultry as it is for other livestock. A few crumbs from the table or an occasional feed of corn will never produce profitable fowls. It pays to feed a balanced ration.

BOWLING.

The "Mivvies" and the "High Rollers," two of the best teams on the alleys, clashed on Friday night and it was nip-and-tuck to the end. The first game went to the Mivvies, the score being Mivvies 342, High Rollers 319. The second game was won by the High Rollers by a score of 408 to 350. This game gave the High Rollers courage and they went in to win the last game, the score being 371 for the Rollers and 332 for the Mivvies. This week the man who rolls the highest score will be presented with a beautiful sterling silver spoon. The spoon will be one of a set, and it will be possible for one man to capture them all.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amount necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $360.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

VOL XXXIV NO. 7 PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO, TUESDAY JANUARY 10, 1911 PRICE TWO CENTS

THE INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE NEW CITY COUNCIL WAS HELD YESTERDAY

ommittees for 1911 Were Struck Off

YOR MORROW'S ADDRESS TO THE NEW CITY COUNCIL YESTERDAY MORNING.

gratulated the Members on Their Election and Welcomed Them as Members of the City Council for 1911.

he Council Board formally opened erday morning. With the Mayor e the representatives of the Wards follows:
outh Ward—Ald. Buller and Donentre Ward—Ald. Metheral and dburn.
Vest Ward—Ald. Edgar and Brown.
Jorth Ward—Ald. Kerneghan and ham.
East Ward—Ald. Anderson and rgan.

THE MAYOR'S ADDRESS.

Mayor Morrow read the following dress to the Council:

entlemen of the Council.—it gives a great deal of pleasure to conatulate you on your election, and welcome you as members of the y Council for the year 1911. I am e that each member of the Counwill do his best for the advancent of the city, and I feel confident t the members will work together asantly and harmoniously, and I at that the year will be a record in the growth and prosperity of city.

s you are aware, there were two laws voted on by the ratepayers Monday last, the first to assist Bonner-Worth Company by loanthem up to $12,000.00 on their d and buildings, and the other to nt Chas. E. Dettman and his asiates a franchise for the purpose supplying natural gas to the city. e Bonner-Worth, while carried by arge majority, did not receive the uiring assent of three-fifths of the al number of ratepayers. The tman by-law, while it carried by a e majority, contains a provision ring a ten-year exclusive franchise it therefore will be necessary to ly to the legislature to have both these by-laws confirmed.

here were several important works rted by the city last year, which still in an uncompleted condition. e sewer extensions and the storm ins in the south-western part of city are under contract, and uld be completed early in the r. The Isolation Hospital build- is about finished. This building uld be furnished and equipped at early a date as possible, so that city will be in a position to care any contagious diseases that may uire hospital treatment. The ith street bridge will require more ng at the western approach and struction of sidewalks and headhe matter of permanent pavements taken up by last year's council, owing to the opposition encoun- was not proceeded with. Owto the fact that we have some or 64 miles of streets, I am ongly of the opinion that some polshould be adopted by the Coun- for providing permanent roadways I believe it will be well for the ncil to give attention to this tter at the earliest opportunity. he Council have already given no- that they will apply for legisla- n at the coming session of the islature, to enable the city to as- t in defraying the cost of a build- for the Protestant poor of the y, and empowering the Council to y a rate on the Protestant ratepayers for the maintenance of such mates as may be sent from the city and for the same power to levy a rate on the Roman Catholic ratepayers for the maintenance of such inmates in the House of Providence as may be sent from the city. This, if carried out, will provide the very necessary accommodation for the Protestant poor of the city.

I would like to emphasize a statement made in my address to the Council a year ago in which I stated that the continued growth of the city depended to a very large extent on the securing and locating of new manufacturing industries. The Council of 1910, made a grant of $2,000.00 to the Board of Trade for the purpose of engaging an industrial commissioner. An official, namely Mr. H. V. Duggan, was engaged about the first of June last, who has been devoting his time to this work, and as Mayor, I have been kept in close touch with Mr. Duggan and know that he has been doing his work in a very systematic manner, and I am strongly of the opinion that good results will accrue to the city from the expenditure of the above sum. I am of the opinion that the Council and the Board of Trade should act together in this matter for another year.

There is another matter which should engage the attention of the Council before very long, and that is the question of a new city hall. The present building does not provide adequate accommodation for carrying on the city's business, and in appearance it is not in keeping with the size and importance of the city, or with other public buildings. It compares very unfavorably with civic buildings in other cities not so large as Peterborough.

The quarters now occupied by the police department are very inadequate and unsanitary. I think this question should be discussed with the city trust commissioners to see if some scheme could not be devised whereby this building could be erected without issuing debentures for the cost thereof.

I feel satisfied that the members of the Council will give their best attention to the matters that will come before them, and that the endeavor of each one will be to transact the business expeditiously, and in the interests of the City as a whole.

When the Mayor concluded his address the Council met in the city committee rooms and the following committees were appointed:

Board of Works—Ald. Metheral, chairman; Ald. Graham, Anderson, Brown, Duncan and Bradburn.

Fire, Water and Light—Ald. Morgan, chairman; Ald. Edgar Graham and Kerneghan.

Manufacturers' Committee — Ald. Buller, chairman; Ald. Edgar, Brown and Anderson.

Finance Committee—Ald. Bradburn, chairman; Ald. Buller, Metheral and Duncan.

Property Committee—Ald. Duncan, chairman; Ald. Bradburn, Morgan and Brown.

Legal and Reception Committee — Ald. Graham, chairman; Ald. Bradburn, Anderson, Kerneghan and Edgar.

NO POWER COMMITTEE.

On motion of Ald. Bradburn, the power committee was dispensed with. Ald. Duncan proposed Ald. Bradburn to the committee of two with the Mayor.

The Mayor congratulated Ald. Bradburn on last year's financial report, their being a surplus of $4,000 or $5,000.

The large number of enquiries that have been received by the Grand Trunk Pacific during the late fall and which are on the increase indicate that there will be an extremely heavy immigration, especially of Americans who will settle along the G.T.P. in the coming spring.

City Fathers in First Regular Session for 1911

Dr. Young and Mr. Robert Neill Appointed Members of the Board of Health---The Property Committee to Appoint a Caretaker for Isolation Hospital

The City Fathers met in their first regular session for 1911 at eight o'clock last evening.

There were present:—Mayor W. G. Morrow and Aldermen Morgan, Anderson, Graham, Kerneghan, Brown, Edgar, Metheral, Bradburn, Duncan, and Buller.

Ald. Bradburn reported the Standing Committee as published elsewhere.

Ald. Metheral was, on motion of Ald. Morgan, seconded by Ald. Anderson, added to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Dr. Young and Robert Neill were appointed members of the Board of Health.

CHARITY FUNDS.

Ald. W. H. Bradburn was re-appointed a member of the committee to distribute charitable funds under the provisions of the will of the late Elmyra Grover Foley.

PUBLIC LIBRARY BOARD.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall was appointed a member of the Public Library Board, his term of office to be three years, dating from February 1st, 1911.

$75 GRANT.

On motion of Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald. Metheral, a grant of $75 was made the Peterborough Poultry Association for this year.

CARETAKER FOR HOSPITAL.

Ald. Graham moved, seconded by Ald. Morgan, that the Property Committee be authorized to appoint a caretaker for the Isolation Hospital, and procure such fittings and equipment as they deem necessary—Carried.

BAD SEWERAGE.

Ald. Graham drew attention to a defective sewer or drain running into the river at Dublin and Harvey streets, the stench from which is at times unbearable. This matter will be attended to.

TO COMPLETE PUBLIC LIBRARY

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the Property Committee be authorized to purchase whatever furniture and fittings are necessary to complete the Public Library equipment.

CLOSING OF STREETS.

The Board of Railway Commissioners wrote asking if the city would object to the closing of four streets, to facilitate the right of way of the C.P.R.'s new line.

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Morgan, that the Solicitor and the Mayor be authorized to oppose the suggested closing of Rink, Stewart, Park and Chamberlain streets, subwaying Park street and diverting Townsend street; and take all necessary steps to protect the city's interests—Carried.

The City Solicitor was also instructed to oppose the suggested diversion of Romaine street into the Monaghan road, to facilitate street crossing protection, and to furnish the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners with information as to the amount of traffic at these points in question.

Ald. Duncan hoped that in the appropriations this year enough money will be allowed the Property Committee to fix up the Council Chamber, which has not been renovated for 15 years.

Ald. Buller wants a concrete wall built at Crescent street, and Ald. Graham insists that the concrete wall at the creek in the north Ward, promised some time ago, be attended to first. The Board of Works will take both these matters into its earnest consideration.

Pill Pounders and the C.G.E. Machine Shop Play a Tie Game

Last night the C.G.E. machine shop team tied the Pill Pounders in a league game, score 1—1. They were late getting started and played 12 minutes each way. Referee Ira Moore had his hands full from the start, as the players were a little rough. While Baird was in the box the machine shop scored C.G.E. 1, Pill Pounders 0. Time 7 minutes.

Baird soon returned to the box for tripping Halpin, and Ross soon followed for a like offence. Mien brought Thompson down and while he was going to the box, half-time was called.

After two minutes rest they started again, Hilliard, Baird and Thompson took a rest about the same time, but the Pill Pounders could not score. LeBrun and Ross started a free-for-all and Hilliard thought he should be there too. The three had a reserved seat for 2 minutes. Mien managed to score for the Pill Pounders at this point and then the bell rang.

Halpin and Ross were instrumental in keeping the score so small while Coughlin shone for the machine shop. The machine shop will likely challenge Lindsay when they get into their stride.

POWER HOUSE LEAKS.

The Water Commission at its meeting on Saturday passed the following:

That the secretary write the Bishop Construction Company and inform the company that the roof of the pump house leaks all round its borders and this must be made right and if it is not done within two weeks the commission will have it done and charge the expense to the company.

The chairman and the secretary-treasurer were authorized to execute under their hands and the commissioners' seal a conveyance from the commissioners to the corporation of the City of Peterborough of the land and in right, conveyed by John Stothard to the commissioners by deed dated the 17th day of November, 1910.

The full board, Messrs. T. F. Matthews, chairman; W. H. Hill, and W. H. Moore were present.

A ROYALIST SENTIMENT.

Talk of Bringing the Duke of Connaught to Canada Renewed.

Toronto, January 9.—Once again the talk of bringing the Duke of Connaught to Canada is renewed. Though it is probably due to a sort of Royalist or Cavalier sentiment, it is really revolutionary in its character. Once the step is taken it will be difficult to retrace; and we ought to "think once, think twice, think thrice" before the precedent of selecting the Governor-General from the Royal family is set.

Such a custom would seriously change the relation between the Governor-General and the Canadian Ministers. A weak Ministry might give undue weight to the opinions of a Royal personage. On the other hand if a strong Ministry asserted itself against him, the conflict would be made acute and embarrassing by the nearness of the Governor-General to the Throne.

Our Governor-General is in the habit of making speeches on all sorts of subjects. They are freely and fairly criticized, like the speeches of other public men. The Duke of Connaught and his royal successors will either have to allow themselves less latitude or else their speeches will be regarded by a good many people as oracles. Should a Prince make a slip, or run counter to public sentiment there will be a tendency to silence criticism by an awe-stricken murmur of "Hush." This is not desirable. We respect our Governors, but we do not want their heads surrounded by halos.

Royalty requires a court. The establishment of a court would be distinctly injurious to Canada. It ple with social ambitions, and in- would swell the heads of foolish people and increase the tendency to extravagance and ostentation. Ottawa, as the capital of Canada, ought to be regarded by the people of Canada as a place for the transaction of serious business, where the rights of the people are considered in a steady light, not in a blaze of fireworks. We should promote the dignity of Parliaments, we should treat public men with respect, but we should discourage any addition to ornament and ceremony. Members of Parliament should have their eyes turned toward the people rather than Rideau Hall. No institution in Ottawa should be allowed to overshadow "the grand inquest of the nation."

OLD COMMON SENSE.

Change Food When You Feel Out of Sorts.

"A great deal depends upon yourself and the kind of food you eat," the wise old doctor said to a man who came to him sick with stomach trouble and sick headache once or twice a week, and who had been taking pills and different medicines for three or four years.

He was induced to stop eating any sort of fried food or meat for breakfast, and was put on Grape-Nuts and cream, leaving off all medicines.

In a few days he began to get better and now he has entirely recovered and writes that he is in better health than he has been before in twenty years. This man is 58 years old and says he feels "like a new man all the time."

Mayor Morrow Banquets The Council and The City Officials

A Splendid Bill of Fare Followed By Brilliant Speeches---The Most Acceptable and Entertaining Function of Its Nature Yet Given in This City

His Worship, Mayor W. G. Morrow entertained the new City Council, civic officials and a few other distinguished and representative citizens at a recherche banquet in Hooper's grill rooms last night. The function proved the most acceptable, entertaining and instructive event of its nature ever held in Peterborough. The viands were exceptionally tasty and palatable—served in excellent style—while the after dinner speeches delivered by eminent local authorities on the subjects discussed, were replete with commendable suggestions for the executive digestion of those invested with the responsibility for Peterborough's municipal government for nineteen hundred and eleven.

Those who had the privilege and pleasure of attending as his worship's guests were:—Ex-Mayor Rush, Ex-Mayor Kendry, Ex-M.P.; His Honor Judge Huycke, chairman of Police Commissioners; D. W. Dumble; Water Commissioner W. H. Moore; Industrial Commissioner Duggan; — Braydon, of Pennsylvania; Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson; Vincent Eastwood; City Solicitor E. H. D. Hall; City Engineer T. A. S. Hay; City Clerk S. R. Armstrong; Tax Collector W. J. Green; Aldermen Metheral, Buller, Edgar, Kerneghan, Duncan, Graham, Bradburn, Brown, Anderson and Morgan; Chief of Police Thompson; Fire Chief Howard; F. Craig of the Examiner; A. C. Yokome of the Review and Chas. H. J. Mitchell of the Times.

Young City With Vast Opportunities

The splendid after-dinner program thoughtfully prepared and readily contributed to, was opened with the customary toast to the King, followed by an exceedingly acceptable speech from His Honor, Judge Huycke, Chairman of Police Commissioners. His honor considered it a pleasure to be present at this inaugural social gathering of Peterborough's City Fathers, whom he warmly congratulated upon election to their high office. He also found reason to congratulate the people upon some past services rendered by previous city councils, and paid a glowing tribute to Mr. James Kendry's eighteen years of public service in the interests of this community and constituency. His honor hoped that the City Fathers had not sought their office for honor alone, but had been actuated by a higher motive—that of duty to the electors who had honored them with their confidence. Continuing, the distinguished speaker claimed to know something of municipal affairs, having represented his native town of Cobourg six years as Alderman and four years as Mayor. And he was proud that his fellow citizens had honored him with opportunities to contribute his share in fostering the interests of that little town along the lake front. This is a critical time in the history of Peterborough; asserted his honor. This is a young city with vast opportunities; it has done well in the past, and good administration will assure a progressive future. It is not sufficient to consider the tax bill for 1911, but it is incumbent upon the city government to look ahead and legislate for the years that are to follow. Industrial Commissioner Duggan should have all the assistance possible; Peterborough is known as a manufacturing city, and enjoys undeniable capacities for evolving into a much greater manufacturing centre than it is at present. It promises to become the industrial and intellectual capital of the Midland district. The speaker next hoped that this year's Council would conduct the affairs of the city in a deliberate, parliamentary and intelligent manner, and he had no reason to think they would not. While Peterborough excelled in a great many features, there is one charateristic in which it is deficient; he did not think the city officials had and do not exert themselves to beautify the city. We have many natural scenic advantages, which, however, are marred by ugly posts, unsightly bill boards and obnoxious back yards. Such defacing conditions should be attended to. At this point his honor suggested, in parenthesis, that efficient athletic grounds be provided for the wholesome pleasure of young people. (Applause.). Continuing, he next drew attention to the fact that twenty years ago Ottawa was the most ugly and god-forsaken city in Canada; but a commission appointed to improve this then deplorable conditions, and to-day the capital is one of the most beautiful cities in North America. And what has been accomplished there can be accomplished here, including building pleasant driveways, planting trees where needed, and cleansing our naturally beautiful river from impurities, together with other needed improvements at unsightly places, thus converting the banks of the Otonabee into attractive pleasure resorts for both citizens and visitors. In conclusion the gifted speaker wished the City Fathers a year of success and usefulness in the positions in which they have been respectively placed.

Municipal Goverament by Commission.

Water Commissioner W. H. Moore spoke on this question. His address while practically the same as that he recently delivered before the Board of Trade, and fully reported in these columns, was new perhaps to some present, and very appropriate to the occasion. He again fully explained the system of government by an elected commission now being satisfactorily experienced in Des Moines, U.S.A., and offered that Peterborough's City Council is too large for all practical purposes, for there are not more that $30,000 annual revenue over which our City Fathers have control. Again, there is no earthly reason why ten Aldermen and a Mayor should be expected to devote their time and energy to this city's interests without any compensation whatever. Under the elected commission system in vogue in Des Moines, a city like Peterborough pays its Mayor $1,500 a year and each of its two councilmen $1,200. A feature of this method of government not heretofore touched upon is the provision for a civil service commission, from which candidates for civic office must get certificates of qualification for the same. In conclusion Mr. Moore ended a very able and thoughtful address with his opinion that our civic government might be, with advantage, materially reduced in numbers, its members to be elected for a term of years, and paid a decent salary to justify the best service attainable.

More Sunshine and More Beauty.

Mr. D. W. Dumble spoke at length on the question of beautifying the city. He deplored the recent tendency of builders to crowd houses together and thus shut out the sun, and ridiculed the painful uniformity of architecture in our private dwellings. Peterborough, with its seven hills like old Rome, its verdant valleys and running streams and lake and river offers abundant opportunities. He strongly advocated the creation of a broad five or six miles driveway, taking in the parks, cemetery, lift lock, oval, hospitals, river and canal, properly graded, and appropriately lined with shade trees and well-kept boulevards. This could be accomplished at a little judicious expenditure—so much each year—and the loyal co-operation of adjacent property owners. By such a course not only would means for truly equestrian pleasure be furnished, but landscape enhanced and created that would afford enjoyment to strangers and citizens and beautify the city. Mr. Dumble suggested that to carry into effect the program here outlined a committee be appointed with the Mayor and an ex-officio member.

The Industrial Situation.

Industrial Commissioner Duggan gave a very intelligent and lucid address on the question of securing industries to which unfortunately time and space will not permit of reference in detail. But allusion will be made to his excellent and comprehensive effort in Saturday's issue. He assured the company that he and those associated with him are aiming to build upon firm ground to secure such industries as are logical to Peterborough's advantages, and he had every reason to hope that the future will see considerable tangible results from their efforts.

Sanitary Requirements.

Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson offered a very able and instructive address on Sanitary Requirements, which was much enjoyed by all present.

Miss Minnie Jackson, 187 Carlton street, Toronto, is the guest of Mrs. John E. Patten.

PETERBORO' WON AT COBOURG 9 TO 7

THE GOLD QUEEN MINING CO.

An Investment That Looks Promising.

This Company owns 135 acres of fine Mineral bearing ground, situated in the centre of a rich mining district. About 1900 feet of development work has been done and the result shows a considerable quantity of good paying ore, which only now needs a mill to treat the ore and produce profits which means dividends to the shareholders.

Over $15,000 has already been expended on the mines and the treasury stock now offered is to raise the money necessary to erect the mill and at once make the mines a dividend paying proposition. The moment the mill is in operation the shares will undoubtedly become worth considerably more than the low price at which they are offered today, so if you want to make money do not delay in making application for as many shares as you can conveniently handle. If desired, monthly payments can be made on large blocks of stocks.

The President of the company, a successful business man of Chicago, has put his own money into this concern and is so confident of its success that he does not hesitate to advise all his friends to take advantage of the present offering.

Do not omit to notice that the capitalization of this company is unusually low, only $100,000, so that you are not paying for a lot of water, that the mines are now producing ore and that the proceeds of the sale of the stock now offered, is solely for the purpose of erecting a mill to treat it and produce profits.

The Gold Queen Mining Co., is stated to be in a sound financial position, but needs more money to carry out the plans of the managers.

We would call attention to their announcement on another page of this paper which is worth reading.

Winnipeg, Jan. 7.—M. J. Finkelstein, who conducted the defence of Slavio Federenko, has received a letter from a friend of the latter in Russia, who says that the police have raided Federenko's home, seized all his papers and personal belongings and threatened his family that every member will be thrown into jail unless the Federenko agitation is immediately stopped.

If you have trouble in getting rid of your cold you may know that you are not treating it properly. There is no reason why a cold should hang on for weeks and it will not if you take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For sale by all dealers.

THE FARMERS' BANK.

To those with an inside knowledge of financial conditions the suspension of the Farmers' Bank will be no surprise. At the time of its organization curious rumors circulated as to the peculiar manner in which much of the stock was said to have been floated. Some of it was reported to have been placed with farmers who possessed nothing and could never retire the promissory notes which they gave in exchange for the scrip. It was not long before the shares fell to a discount and then stumped almost out of sight. Certainly the management showed lack of discretion in bringing on the suit against the Home Bank, for the disclosures made at the trial hastened the suspension. The public does not like to hear of a bank investing a great proportion of its assets in mines. Fortunately the Farmers' Bank has never assumed sufficiently important proportions to make its default a very serious matter to the community at large, as were the Ontario Bank and Sovereign Bank failures. Its paid-up capital is only a little over half a million dollars. It has no reserve fund, but has been paying four per cent. per annum in dividends to its shareholders. Unless the Institution is able to resume payment within 60 days, liquidation must follow, and once more hundreds of people of small means all over the country will be surprised to learn what the double liability clause in the Bank Act signifies. The amendment to the Act now before Parliament also is introduced none too soon. It should be made impossible for a prospective purchaser of bank shares to take the plunge without full knowledge of the double liability which every share carries. Such outside audits are needed as will at least lessen the alarming number of bank failures in this country. Lastly, it is high time that general managers and directors should be held civilly and criminally liable for disasters for which they are responsible.

LOANS FOR THE POOR.

Mr. Monk's co-operative bill is intended to allow the incorporation of small credit societies for the financing of small undertakings. Mr. Osler protests that the bill will open the way for wild-catting, speculation and swindling. It is quite right to erect safeguards against these dangers, but nothing should be done to prevent poor men from getting together and helping each other with their savings.

Some time ago there was a general denunciation of Glenn Curtis. The [illegible] in no other way. A poor man is thrown out of employment or he incurs heavy expense [illegible] to buy a little business, or build himself a home. Like the late Mr. [illegible] inspector of a loan company he is not a business man, and therefore cannot get accommodation at a bank. He should be allowed to deal with an institution formed by men like himself, so that when he is in need he may borrow at a moderate rate of interest, and when he is a little ahead he may have an investment for his money.

involuntary target the less chance is there of being hit. As soon as he reached the earth from the top of the wall he took to his heels and ran like a hare in the direction of some horses that stood near the Clock Tower.

He was fired at, of course, but [illegible] and the sepoys soon ceased their efforts to put a bullet through him before they fancied he was a deserter.

As soon as they saw his face there [illegible] no doubt whatever on that score. Indeed, were it his unhappy lot to fall in with the British patrols already beginning to feel their way northward from Bengal along the Grand Trunk Road he would assuredly have been hanged at sight on his mere appearance.

Chumru's answers to the questions showered on him were magnificently untrue. According to him the fortress of Lucknow was already a ruin and its precincts a shambles. The accursed Feringhis might hold out till the morning, but he doubted it. Allah smite them! —that was why he chanced being slain by his brethren rather than be slain by mistake next day when the men of Oudh took vengeance on their oppressors. He could not get away earlier because he was a prisoner, locked up by the huzoors, forsooth, for a trifling matter of a few rupees left behind by one of the white dogs who fell that day at Chinhut.

In brief, Chumru abused the English with such an air that he was regarded by the rebels as quite an acquisition. They had not learned, as yet, that it was better to shoot a dozen belated friends than permit one spy to win his way through their lines.

Watching his opportunity, he slipped off into the bazaar. Now he was quite safe, being one among two hundred thousand. But time was passing; he wanted a horse, and might expect to find the canal bridge closely guarded.

Having a true Eastern sense of humor behind that saturnine visage of his, he hit on a plan of surmounting both difficulties with ease.

Singling out the first well-mounted and half-intoxicated native officer he met—though, to his credit be it said, he chose a Brahmin subadar of cavalry—he hailed him boldly.

"Brother," said he, "I would have speech with thee."

Now, Chumru took his life in his hands in this matter. For one wearing the livery of servitude to address a high-caste Brahmin thus was incurring the risk of being sabered then and there. In fact the subadar was so amazed that he gaped stupidly at the Mohammedan who greeted him as "brother," and it may be that those fierce eyes looking at him from different angles had a mesmeric effect.

"Thou?" he spluttered, reining in his horse, a hardy country-bred, good for fifty miles without halt.

"Even I," said Chumru. "I have occupation, but I want help. One will suffice, though there is gold enough for many."

"Gold, sayest thou?"

"Ay, gold in plenty. The dog of a Feringhi whom I served has had it hidden these two months in the thatch of his house near the Alumbagh. Today he is safely bottled up there—" he jerked a thumb towards the sullen thunder of the bombardment. "I am a poor man, and I may be stopped if I try to leave the city. Take me up behind thee, brother, and give me safe passage to the bungalow, and behold, we will share treasure of a lakh or more!"

The Brahmin's brain was bemused with drink, but it took in two obvious elements of the tale at once. Here was a fortune to be gained by merely cutting a throat at the right moment.

"That is good talking," said he. "Mount, friend, and leave me to answer questions."

Chumru saw that he had gained his man rightly, and the evil glint in the subadar's eyes told him the unspoken thought. He climbed up behind the high-pommed saddle and, after the horse had showed his resentment of a double burthen, was taken through the bazaar as rapidly as its thronged streets permitted. Sure enough, the canal bridge was watched.

"Whither go ye?" demanded the officer in charge.

"To bring in a Feringhi who is in hiding," said the Brahmin.

"Shall I send a few men with you?"

"Nay, we two are plenty—" this with a laugh.

"Quite plenty," put in Chumru. The officer glanced at him and was convinced. Being a Mohammedan, he took Chumru's word without question, which showed the exceeding wisdom of Chumru in selecting a Brahmin for the sacrifice; thus was he prepared to deal with either party in an unholy alliance.

They jogged in silence past the Alambagh. The Brahmin, on reflection, decided that he would stab Chumru before the board was disturbed and he could then devise another hiding-place at his leisure. Chumru had long ago decided to send the Brahmin to the place where all unbelievers go, at the first suitable opportunity. Hence the advantage lay [illegible] wide [illegible] own side.

[illegible] there were [illegible] mean desolation and each moment the subadar's mind was growing clearer under the prospect of ghost wealth to be won so easily.

"Where is this bungalow, friend?" he asked, [illegible] seeing nothing but a straight road in front.

"Patience, brother. 'Tis now quite near. It lies behind that tope of trees [illegible]"

The other half turned to ascertain in what direction the guide was pointing.

"It is not on the main road, then?"

"No. A man who has gold worth the keeping loves not to dwell where all men pass."

A little farther, and Chumru ah nounced:

"We turn off here."

It was dark. He thought he had hit upon a by-way, but no sooner did the horse quit the shadow of the trees by the roadside than he saw that he had been misled by the wheel-tracks of a gun's cart. The Brahmin suffered one suspicion.

"Is there no better way than this?" he cried, when his charger nearly stumbled into a deep ditch.

"One calls, but you may deem it [illegible]

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,224,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roselyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,500 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an option of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long-standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation, which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $2000, and has to construct a dozen subways as Neave St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, run block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled, involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk, of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city other for city or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Miers, D. Sc. F.R.S., Waynflete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derives from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

THRILLING TIME IN THE JUNGLE

A Dog's Plucky Fight With a Lion—
A Camera Man's Narrow Escape

Simba, the pluckiest fox-terrier in the world, and the only dog of its breed which has ever tackled a full grown lion "single-handed," has returned to London, her birthplace, from British East Africa. The story of how Simba fought the lion was told by Mr. Cherry Kearton, the dog's master, who has just returned from the Kenia district of British East Africa with a number of cinematograph pictures of wild animals.

Simba's fight with the lion took place when Mr. Kearton was trying to obtain pictures of the killing of a lion by native spearmen. Two lions had been located in some scrub, and twenty Masai warriors, with spears, were ready to attack. The lioness, however, escaped, and the male lion, after appearing for a moment, bolted into a dried river bed and refused to budge.

"Simba," said Mr. Kearton, "darted into the donga, and within a few seconds we heard a tremendous roar which seemed to shake the ground, and the bushes within twelve yards of us were violently agitated. The lion roared again and again, and in the brief intervals we heard the weak but very furious yapping of the dog. The Masai stood, every nerve tingling, with spears poised.

Biting the Lion's Tail

"Suddenly the lion dashed through a little clearing, and we were amazed to see Simba hanging on with her teeth embedded in his tail. Three spears were hurled at the escaping beast, with such accuracy that they all transfixed the heart, and the lion fell dead. You must know that the skin of the lion belongs, according to local custom, not to the warrior whose spear inflicts the fatal wound, but to the man who first rushes in and cuts off the black tip from the tail.

"Two of the three spearmen dashed into the donga, but they found Simba with the black tip still between her teeth, resolutely determined to oppose any hostile claim. The spearmen, who were lost in admiration, agreed that the skin belonged by right of seizure to Simba, and they handed it over later to my wife as trustee for the dog."

Mr. Kearton also relates the following stories of his adventures, during a very adventurous journey:

"Whilst I was in the Kenia district getting cinematograph pictures I was attacked by fever, and for some days my temperature ranged from 102 to 103 degrees.

"It was while I was in this state that the Somali horsemen told me that they had rounded up four lions. What would I do? I told them that at all costs we would have the fight, and that I and my machine must be carried to the spot, some fifteen miles distant. By the time I arrived three of the lions had escaped, but the fourth was still held up.

"We had with us six Somali horsemen (unarmed) and eighteen Masai spearmen, who were to do the killing, while, as I was unarmed, two spearmen stood guard over me and the camera. The lion made a running fight for about a mile, and again and again charged the horsemen. Then he made a stand.

"The spearmen rushed forward, and at a distance of ten yards six spears were hurled into his body. I was within thirty yards of the beast with my hand on the handle of the machine, but just as the charge was made I fell forward unconscious through weakness. I have no films of that fight."

A Successful Hunt

"But my business was to get pictures, and I relied upon my two spearmen guardians, in whom I had great confidence. So I went on turning the handle. The lioness then seemed to realise that I was not the danger, and she darted back and lay down, awaiting the attack of the advancing Masai.

"Then her heart failed her, but as she turned to bolt, one of the men hurled a short sword, which transfixed her mouth. Turning again, she charged the Masai, bit through three of the shields which the warriors carry, and wounded three of the men before she fell under the spear thrusts. That was a successful hunt with satisfactory results."

Mr. Kearton then related particulars of a "close shave" with a rhinoceros which he had last year in the same district. On this occasion he did not succeed in obtaining any pictures.

"One morning my friend Clark, of the New York Natural History Museum, and I, went to look for a troupe of fourteen lions of which we had heard. We both carried rifles, and two spearmen and some porters accompanied us. Suddenly my camera boy shouted something which I did not catch, and bolted past me.

A Narrow Escape

"Sharply turning, I saw the two spearmen and Clark making with all haste for the only tree in sight. I thought the troupe of lions was on us, but in a second or two I heard the unmistakable puffing noise made by the rhinoceros, and then I saw two coming toward me at full speed. I, too, made a dash for the tree.

"But the tree was too thick to climb The Masai hid behind the trunk. Clark was five yards away with rifle levelled. The two rhinoceroses came on in a cloud of dust at a speed of about twenty miles an hour.

"When they were within four yards, Clark, whose rifle had jammed, shouted, 'Fire, Kearton. I fired and dropped one. His head as he fell almost touched my feet. Within a few seconds he rose, made as though he would charge Clark, and then bolted.

"I thought the second rhinoceros had followed the wounded animal, but it had gone in another direction, and as I dashed round the tree I ran shoulder to shoulder into it. I suffered most in the collision.

"This rhinoceros escaped, but the one I had shot dropped dead within a hundred yards."—London Daily Mail

A ROMANTIC IDYLL

By H. M. Mosdell

How entrancing is the old ocean in his peaceful summer moods, when, "beautiful as is the rose in June and fresh as the trickling rainbow of July," his expansive bosom is ruffled only by the merest dimples of wavelets, stirred by the warm offshore wind. And once, in far-off Newfoundland, tired of rambling through the dwarfed bushes and over the green stretches of sward that clothed the brow of a low bluff by the shore, I lay on the soft verdure of a tiny knoll and watched him there asleep, musing on his greatness, the variety of his moods and the irresistible power with which at times his mighty billows thundered where now the fondled with the shore and laid his white lace on the sands."

On the one hand were the waters of a fisher haven whereon small black fishing craft lay motionless at anchor, looking like carved ebony models in a setting of glass. Tiny wooden cottages, a mere handful of them, fringed the rocky shore, the rough exteriors smoothed by the distant prospect and mellowed by the warm rays of the July sun. Behind and beyond haven and settlement rose the tree-clothed hills, forming a sombre setting for that fair picture of peace and suggesting the thought that the chill shadow of sorrow seems ever to hover nearest when life's day is most cheerful and sunshiny.

Mute as a thought, but eloquent in its very silence, a low, black, tarred cross stood as the emblem of death by two mounds not far from where I sat. Here, mused I, is striking testimony to the cruelty of you alluring ocean. Two strangers surely sleep yonder, having been swept in by the boisterous billows after some storm and laid to rest in this lonely spot, far removed from the reach of hands that would keep the grass trim above them and deck their graves with memory's floral tributes. And far away, maybe, some sad hearts wait hopelessly for the return of the two who lie so still here where the wind sings a lullaby and the wild waves thunder their requiem.

"Good day to 'ee, sur," said a gruff voice, rousing me from my musings, and I faced about to accost an aged fisherman.

He was a bent and grey old man, rough clad, but with a strong, kindly face framed in a profusion of whiskers that almost covered the chest of a heavy blue jersey. His face reflected much of the placidity of the great ocean on whose bosom he had been cradled and reared and in whose companionship he had grown old and toil-worn. For their great foster-mother teaches many things to "those who go down to the sea in ships."

He talked to me in the affable and half-apologetic fashion so peculiar to his people, and after a few minutes' desultory conversation I asked him about these two graves and why they were set there so far from human habitation. Then in his own homely speech and in quiet, serious tone, he told me how one of life's promising romances had culminated in a tragedy attested by two neglected graves in this lonely land and broken hearts across the sea.

"Thirty-five year ago, it were. A Frenchman comed into th' harbor t' fish. Aboard of 'un was a mayd, th' skipper's darter, an' seemunly she were courted be a man who was comin' out f'm their own country in another vessel. A little shart mayd, she were, wi' black hair an' eyes, mos' wunnerful quick an' sharp an' alw'ys singin' or hummin' some toone or other. After they'd bin yer f'r a week 'r so t'other vessel comed in wi' her flag flyin' half-mas'. Th' mayd's young man had a'died on th' v'yage over. Th' young oonan never made no noise when they told her. She follered the funeral out yer as quiet 's if she never minded at all. But one evenin' they missed her off th' vessel an' after sarchin' all over th' place found her yer lyin' dead across th' grave. So we buried her alongside o' he, an' th' French crew put th' black cross be th' head o' th' two graves."

The ocean was growing blacker now, darkened by gusts of wind that had suddenly begun to whistle through the closely set trees on the hillside. A great black cloud was rising from the eastern horizon, betokening the coming of a storm and blotting out much of the bright sunlight.

"Looks like a squall," said the fisherman, "I'd best be rowin' in t' th' harbor."

He hesitated a moment, as if undecided about saying something.

"They do say as how 'em two meets yer be their graves every evenin' before a starm," he vouchsafed. "When th' grass gits long in th' summer they's allers a narrer path f'm one grave t' t'other. Some o' th' b'ys rowin' along yer sea they've a' seed things an' yeard voices. Duuno whether 'tis true 'r no. Mebbe. They's queer things happens in this'am lonely places."

I sat there for some time longer, watching while the breeze became a strong gale and old ocean raised his hoary head from rest. Gone were his quiet, his gentleness, his charm. Before me was the emblem of vastness, motion, change, unsparing power.

A DOG AS A WITNESS

A small grey terrier was the chief witness at London Police Court on a summons against a man for keeping a dog without having a license.

The defendant denied that he was the owner—although his name and address were on the collar and the dog had been seen at his house. He said he did not know his name was on the collar. The magistrates said they would like to see the dog and its collar. The gaoler led the animal into court. At once it ran up to the defendant and barked and showed its pleasure by jumping up at him, to the amusement of the court. Chief-Constable Carter: The dog recognises its master. (Laughter.) The Bench came to the conclusion that the dog was the defendant's and fined him $3. The defendant paid the fine and took the dog home with him.

HANDLING OF POTATOES

Some Useful Hints as to Digging, Sorting and Storing the Crop

If potatoes have not been affected with blight or rot, the best time to dig them is as soon as the tops have died, if the weather is favorable. Too often potatoes are dug just before the frost becomes severe enough to freeze the soil to the depth of an inch or so. This time of digging is usually chosen as a matter of convenience and quite irrespective of when the stalks die. The stalks dry up in many places about September and often before. If the potatoes are planted on sandy, loamy soil or a gravelly loam with good natural or artificial drainage there is not much danger of injuring the crop by leaving them in the ground a short time, but if there is no disease the sooner they are dug the better. Potatoes which have been killed by blight will usually rot as soon as the conditions are favorable, and for this reason a diseased crop is better left in the ground, as the tubers which are diseased will most of them show signs of rot before they have to be taken up in October. If diseased potatoes are dug and stored as soon as the tops are dead the disease will almost certainly develop in the pit or cellar, and healthy tubers will rot from contact with the diseased ones. It is not a good practice to dig diseased potatoes early and put them in the field. It is better to delay digging as long as possible and then put the potatoes in a cool, well ventilated cellar where the disease may be checked. Potatoes in wet soil should be dug sooner than those in that which is dryer and well drained. They should be dug in dry weather, so that when they are taken to the cellar or storeroom they will be perfectly dry. If the tubers are housed when wet the conditions become very favorable for the development of the disease which may affect them and for the rotting of the healthy potatoes from contact with those affected.

Digging

The old-fashioned way of digging with the fork is too slow and expensive a method. One man with a fork will dig little more than half an acre a day, while a good potato digger will dig from four to six acres a day. Where several acres of potatoes are grown a mechanical digger becomes almost a necessity and although the outlay for a digging machine amounts to fifty or sixty dollars or more it will harvest the crop at a much smaller cost per bushel than can be done by hand. Not only will it raise the crop more economically than by a fork or plough, but with it the grower is more likely to get his crop dug and picked up while the weather is fine, which is a great consideration.

Where large areas are grown it will be found most convenient to have a number of boxes laid here and there along the rows just far enough apart to allow a man to dump a pail full into them. These boxes should be made strong and of light material and capable of holding about one bushel. They can then be easily lifted by one man onto the wagon and drawn to the cellar or store-room.

Storing

Potatoes should be stored dry in a cool, well ventilated cellar or storeroom which is perfectly dark, as potatoes soon deteriorate in quality if exposed to light. There is no doubt that great loss occurs every year from the careless storing of potatoes by putting them in wet into warm and poorly ventilated cellars and piling them in great heaps. Instead of piling the potatoes against the wall or on the floor, slats should be nailed about one inch apart and about four inches from the wall and a temporary floor should be laid four inches above the permanent floor with small openings between the boards. This will allow air to circulate around and through the pile. If the piles have to be made very large, square ventilators of wood made partly with open slats on two sides and running from the top to the bottom of the pile could be put in here and there through the pile. Another good plan is to keep the potatoes in large crates made with slats nailed close enough together to prevent the potatoes from dropping through. Thousands of bushels of potatoes are lost every year through lack of ventilation. The temperature of the cellar or store-house should be kept as near to 33 to 35 degrees as possible. The cooler potatoes are kept without freezing the better. If too warm the value of the tubers for seed is lessened, since they sprout too easily. They are also much injured for eating.

A good sorting machine can now be obtained which lessens labor considerably. The practice of many growers is to sort and bag the potatoes just before marketing.

QUEER FOOD FOR BABIES

Mothers Who Give Them Beef, Onions and Bloaters

The meetings and conferences in connection with the Royal Sanitary Institute were continued at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton. The Countess of Chichester was unavoidably prevented from presiding at the conference of women on hygiene, and her place was taken by the Mayoress of Brighton. Among the papers read was one by Mrs. W. MacDonald, of Uxbridge, dealing with the feeding of infants. She said that many mothers did not know that pickled onions, corned beef and bloater heads were injurious food for their infants, and that in pure milk they had all the necessary nutrition to sustain infant life for the first six or eight months. One mother, when remonstrated with for giving her baby beef, said, "Well, what am I to do? He won't eat pork."

JUST WHAT HE MEANT

"John, I understand that you have been saying mean things about me to your acquaintances."

"Why, dearest! Everybody knows that isn't so. Why, I tell everybody that it is you that has made me what I am."

"That's what I mean."

HANGED FOR CURIOSITY

His Head Swelled and the Hole Got Smaller

Once, when working on the Midland Railway, I had to go from Birmingham to Wolverhampton, says a correspondent. I was in a compartment alone, when I soon discovered that my mate had failed to put the lamp in at the top. Thinking he had just put it outside the aperture and forgotten it, I placed my box end-up on the seat, and, standing on it, squeezed my head through the hole to seek the lamp. Immediately my eyes were filled with smuts from the engine, and I tried to get my head back. Alas! my head seemed to have swollen, and the hole to have shrunk! In making desperate efforts to liberate myself, I succeeded in kicking my box over, and there I was, hanging from the roof, with my feet a good yard from the floor.

I kicked, yelled, groaned, and screamed for what seemed hours, and at last succeeded in attracting the attention of passengers in the next compartment, when the train was stopped and I was extricated, just as I thought all was up.

Although I nearly met my death from hanging, the company reprimanded me, and suspended me from work for a week.

JUGGLING WITH HER LIFE

A Woman's Desperate Method of Frightening Husband

Desperate measures were taken by Kate Hall, Halifax, England, to frighten her husband. Seeing a candle burning in a cellar window, P. C. Stevenson stopped on his beat shortly after midnight, and peered down into the basement. In the dim light he could see a woman in the cellar with a cord round her neck, suspended from a washing machine. She was shouting, "John," and her husband then appeared at the bottom of the cellar steps, and with a knife cut her down. The constable knocked at the door, and asked what the woman had been trying to do. She told him that her husband had threatened to leave her and that she had pretended to hang herself to frighten him. At the police court, Mrs. Wade was charged with attempting to commit suicide, and she was discharged on promising not to be so foolish again.

STRUCK A LION

Fulton Entered a Cage Where There Were Five Cubs

Some little excitement was created among visitors to Bostock and Wombwell's menagerie, located in Alloa Public Park, by a local publican, named William Fulton, entering alone a cage containing five large-sized lion cubs. One of the animals came forward and Fulton smacked it on the nose with his hand, and it retreated. He remained inside about five minutes and was loudly cheered when he stepped from the cage.

WROUGHT BY A HAMMER-HEAD

A few years ago when I was turning in some works in Sheffield, says H. Batchelor, I happened to be centering a bar of steel to put into my lathe, when my hammer head broke across the eye where the shaft fits through. One half remained on the shaft, and the other went flying into the air. Suddenly there was an awful trembling and bumping higher up the shop, and a great face-plate cracked, and let a large ingot, weighing about thirty tons, fall out. My hammer head had fallen into the gearing, broken all the teeth in the cogs, and split the face-plate. I expected I should be discharged, but they said it was marvelous that no one was killed.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

The woman in charge of the Pickleham post-office was strongly suspected of tampering with the packages and parcels entrusted to her care.

One day a rosy-cheeked youngster entered the post-office and carefully laid upon the counter a huge slice of rich iced cake.

"With my sister, the bride's, compliments," he said; "and will yer please to eat as much as yer possibly can?"

The post-mistress smiled delightedly.

"How very kind of the bride to remember me!" she cried. "Did she know I have a special weakness for wedding-cake?"

"She did that!" coldly replied the youngster. "And she thought she'd send yer a bit of it this afternoon, jest to take the edge off yer appertite before she posted any boxes to her friends!"

OFFENSIVE TO THE LANDSCAPE

In a certain Midland town there is a man who is so ugly that it has been said of him that his face is an "offence to the landscape."

One Bank Holiday he was seated on a rustic bridge some distance outside the town, when a tourist came by, and, after gazing at the "offence" a moment, he said:

"Eh, but th'art ugly!"

"Well," replied the other, in an aggrieved tone, "I can't help it, can I?"

The tourist pondered a moment, and then said:

"Tha might stay at whoam!"

MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE

"Edward, I'm ashamed of you. Bottom of a class of twenty-three younger boys? Disgraceful!"

"But, mother, it might have been worse."

"Worse! How could it have been worse?"

"There might have been more boys in the class."

RATS STEAL FALSE TEETH

A young woman of Burnley left her false teeth in a glass of water for the night, and the following morning they were missing. A haunt of rats under the kitchen slopstone was searched, and there, sure enough, were the missing molars intact. They were lying among some scraps which had been collected by the rats.

POTATOES THAT HUSTLE

Planted on June 7th, Ready for Digging on August 27th.

The Ontario Colonization Bureau has received a letter from one of their new settlers at Cochrane, 423 miles north of Toronto, with a beautiful basket of potatoes, which were shown at the National Exhibition. The land was cleared on June 1st of this year, the seed planted on June 7th, and the crop dug on August 27th.

MILK POINTS

Don't keep milk where it will be warmer than 50 degrees.

Don't leave it in an open dish or pan.

Don't put it in the bottom of the refrigerator.

Keep the cow's tail still by banishing flies. A simple spray will do it.

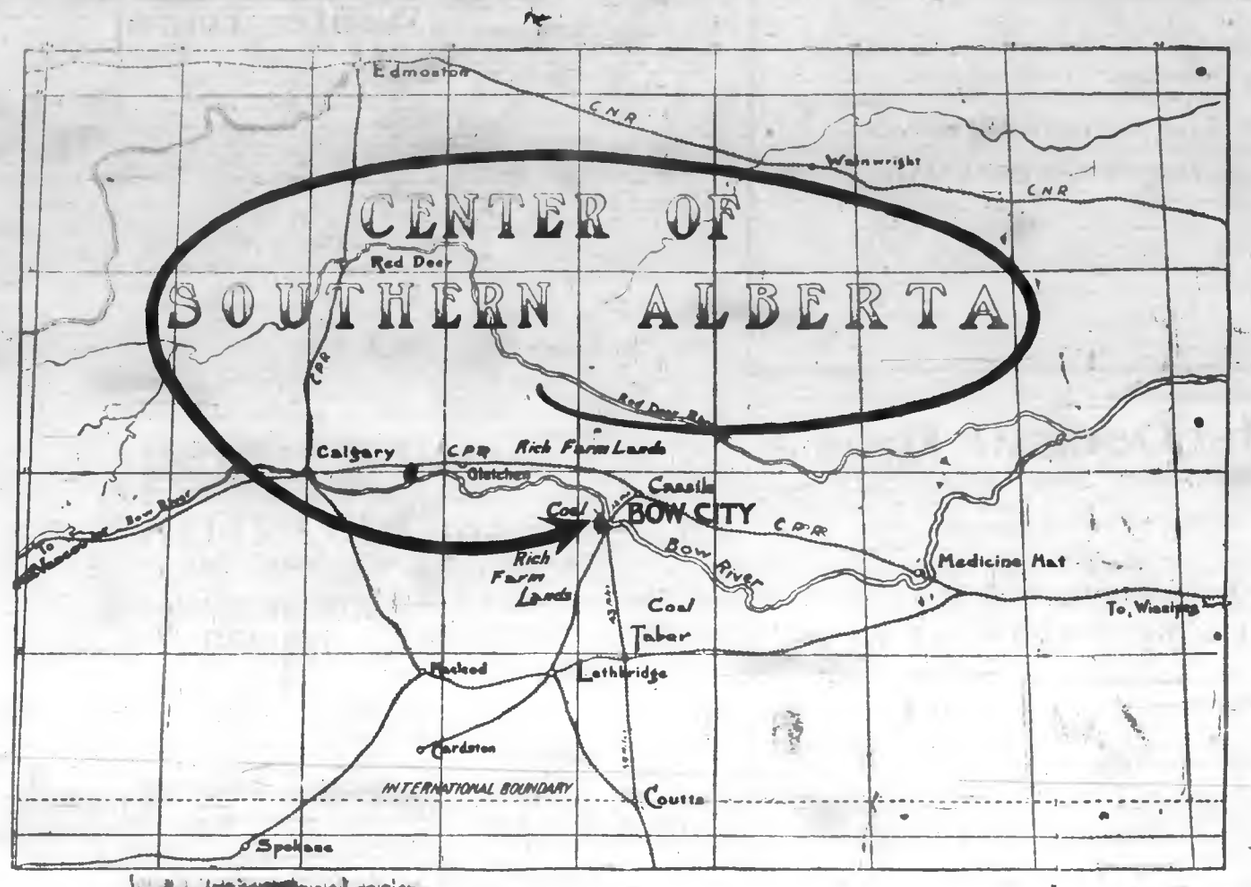
Strain all milk thoroughly. Germs cling to the dirt particles and may thus be eliminated.

Sterilize all crocks, pails, cans and bottles by boiling.

SOME RAPID TRAVELLING

Some folk seem to have all the luck. A man who was discharged from prison the other morning was married during the course of the afternoon, arrested during the course of the evening, and has now been sentenced to twenty-one months' imprisonment.

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"



If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor price.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when "he comes of age that lot will be worth consid- "erable money and will provide a handsome "stake for him in life; it is at least most sub- "stantial life insurance- sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Alberta has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid -a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no licenses shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your apulication by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots. On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

THE REAL DEMOCRACY.

In these days of Lloyd George budgets we hear much about the triumphant march of democracy. By the friends and by the enemies of democrasy it is regarded as something portentous. More than a century ago Alexander Hamilton said,-"Your democracy, sir, is a great beast." The notion of something wild, terrible, voracious, is always in the minds of those who are opposed to the movement. We do not like the expression "a great beast," but, after all, there are beasts and beasts; and the march of democracy really means that the rights of the ox and the horse are to be asserted against the force and the appetite of the lion and the tiger.

When one reads these alarms about the coming of democracy, and the terrible things the common people will do when they come into their own, and compares them with the actual conditions, he scarcely knows whether the result is farce or pathos. For he finds that for ages the masses of the people have been so humble—humble not like Uriah Heep, but like Tom Pinch—so weak in the assertion of their rights, yet so strong in service and in toil—so dumb, so lacking in the means of effective expression. Even to-day, and in countries where democracy is said to be all-powerful, anyone who really studies types of men will find a ludicrous or pathetic contrast between the pictures of the fierce and arrogant democracy and the demeanor of flesh-and-blood mechanics, laborers, and farmers whom he meets in his daily life. They do look and act and speak so little like tyrants—so much like men who would be amply satisfied with a fair chance and something equal opportunities.

The truth is that democracy simply means self-government—the right of each man to manage his own affairs, to have his fair share of the bounty of Providence, and to pay taxes according to his means. It is quite true that in the progress of democracy one occasionally hears extreme assertions of the power of majorities. But these represent a reaction against tyranny worse than that of the majority. It is true that a hundred and one men have no Divine right to rule a hundred; but the system is a protection against the two hundred being ruled by one. Denunciations are hurled against the demagogue who "sways the multitude." He attracts notice because, perforce, he makes a great deal of noise. But a far greater danger is the man who works in the dark, by intrigue, whispering in the ears of influential people. "Swaying the multitude" is not nearly so dangerous a thing when the multitude knows that it is being swayed as when the thing is done in secret.

The average man means well; human nature on the whole is good, not evil. This is the real safety of democracy. When the minds and the hearts of the people are really applied to the management of public affairs, there is not the least fear that the minority will be oppressed, or that individual energy and genius will be smothered.

ONLY A PIN

A Glance at the Trade of Pin-Making —Complex Machinery Used

A very long bridge of years, indeed, spans the time since a lady's "pin money" was really used for the object its name suggests. And there is an equally wide difference between the pins used by "my lady" of those days and the almost invaluable little article we should find it so hard to do without to-day.

At one period in our history the importation of pins into this country was forbidden by law, although so august a personage as Queen Catherine received hers from France, where, at that time most of the pins were made. They were expensive articles, and "pin money" was a consideration, and one with which no lady of any pretensions to fashion could afford to dispense.

Another law with regard to pins was passed in 1543, and it enacted that the sale of pins should be prohibited unless "double-headed," or with "heads fast soldered to the shank." As, unless it be provided with a firm head, a pin is practically useless to us. This law will be read with considerable amusement by ladies of to-day.

When, in 1626, the pin making trade was introduced into Great Britain by one Tilsby, the manufacture of the article was for some time confined to Stroud, but it quickly spread to London, Bristol, and Birmingham; and it is at the great metropolis of the Midlands that most of our pins come from nowadays, although some are still made in Warrington and Dublin.

Most complex is the machinery used now in pin-making. It is a wonderful thing where all the pins go to, and how scarce they are when they are wanted. And the wonder becomes all the greater when we remember that a large factory will turn out many millions of pins in a day and that there are many intricate keeping up this output.

In older pattern machines there used to be eighteen processes, but these have superseded, and now the wonderful mechanisms not only make the pins complete, but stick them in the familiar pale blue papers that everyone knows so well.

Black pins and ladies' hairpins are given their shape by being placed in a revolving chamber, so that they are kept on the move all the while the enamelling process is going on. By this means the enamel settles quite evenly, and a smooth black lustre on the pins is the result.

"It's only a pin," is a remark sometimes heard. Yes, it's only a pin, but it represents, nevertheless, the outcome of one of the greatest triumphs man's inventive genius has ever won, and an article, humble though it be, that few would care to be without.

A DANGEROUS HANDFUL

Alligator Hunting Not a Suitable Occupation for Timid

That one-half of the world does not know how the other half lives is a good deal truer than some people imagine. There are dozens of strange ways of earning a living which those following the more common-place occupations never dream of. Among them surely alligator catching is one on the strangest.

The commercial value of these strange reptiles is, of course, their skins, and for this reason quite a small army of men hunt them regularly in the tropical regions around the rivers and swamps of the Gulf of Mexico. They live in a way peculiar to themselves, known to be 500 years old, and by the tremendous strength which they can exert when occasion calls for it, one would imagine that the oldest they live the stronger they grow.

Besides an unusual amount of pluck and resource in handling the alligator, one needs to have keen eye and a sharp hand. For holding shut the jaws of an alligator one and a half times your own length is life with the toy left in; trying to hold those same jaws open is experience gained too late to be of use. And the alligator in its native land is not as it appears to be at the Zoo, a sleepy and slow-moving creature, but very quick, and quick in all its movements.

Will Receive the Lash.

Belleville, Jan. 5.—Edward Garrison, a middle-aged man residing in Elzevir Township, who is the father of nine children, was sentenced this morning by Judge Desrosiers, to six months in the Central Prison and to receive ten lashes, for an aggravated assault upon his wife and a young son. Garrison used his wife in a shameful manner by biting and beating her.

THE HOUSE

By William Mannering

The old woman sat motionless, staring with unseeing eyes at the slowly dying fire. The daylight faded gradually from the little square window, and the twilight merged into utter darkness. A sudden spurt of sparks from the expiring fire threw a ghostly light on her wrinkled face, lustreless eyes and scanty wisps of snowy hair.

She was roused from her stupor by the rattle of the latch and the sound of a sharp voice.

"Are you there, granny?"

The old woman started out of her chair as she answered "Yes, yes, neighbor. Come in while I gets a light."

She fumbled along the high mantel shelf until her hands touched a box of matches. Lighting a candle, she placed it on the three-legged table that stood in the centre of the room, and the feeble, flickering light revealed a spare, hard-featured woman standing in the doorway.

"What! an' no fire?" she said, as she advanced into the room. "Nights be chilly yet, granny, if the day be a bit warmish."

"I was thinkin'," quavered the old woman, half apologetically, "an' the fire went out unbeknownst."

"You shouldn't think." The other spoke sharply, in a high-pitched voice. "Here, I've brought you a bite of victuals, them's better nor thoughts." She took from under her apron a covered plate and placed it on the table.

"My man didn't eat hearty to-night, so I had some over."

"You're a very good neighbor, to think of——"

"Pish! 'Twould ha' gone to the pig, an' he's very well as 'tis. Besides, human bein's wants grub, I say, an' it puzzles me, granny, how you rabs along."

A wry smile passed across the old, old woman's face.

"That's what I was thinkin when I let the fire go out. I can't rub along much longer, an' that's a fact. I've got a matter o' ten shillins, an' when that's gone, there's the workus, I suppose."

"We've all got that to look forward to, granny, and they won't eat you in the house."

Mrs. Ford shuffled her feet, and looked everywhere except at the figure of the old woman huddled up in the rickety armchair.

"Have you heard anything o' that son o' yours, granny?" she said at last. A smile stilled the twitching of her tremulous lips and she looked up eagerly.

"I've heard nothin'. Nothin' since he went away five years agone, an' if he'd come before my money was all gone, I'd no fear o' the house then, neighbor. I'll be a happy old woman when my boy comes back."

"Well, it's to be hoped he'll come soon, granny."

. . . . . .

The man stepped out of the public house, wiping his mouth with the back of his hand, and slowly shambled along the shady side of the street. His jacket was buttoned up close to his chin, and the frayed ends of the trousers legs trailing the dust at every step almost hid the heelless shoes. He halted irresolutely outside one of a row of small cottages, and, after glancing furtively up and down the deserted road, raised the latch and hesitatingly entered the little room.

"Anybody in?" he queried.

The old woman, sitting in her accustomed chair, turned her head at the sound of his voice, peering with blinking eyes at the sunshine that blazed in through the open doorway.

"Who is it?"

"It's me, mother. Don't yer know me?"

She rose quickly, and stood, one hand on the arm of her chair, the other shading her eyes from the glare of sunlight against which the man's figure made a black, ill-defined patch.

"Me, Jack, yer son. Don't yer know me?" he repeated.

"Oh! my boy, my boy!"

She ran to him, and pulling him by the arm into the dimmer recesses of the room, forced him into the chair she had just vacated.

"An' you're come back at last!" She had pulled his frowzy cap off and was stroking his head. "Oh, John! I've wanted you sore."

She was crying now, and the man moved restively under her caresses. At length he put her away roughly from him and growled: "You might give us some grub, mother. I'm nigh starved."

She busied herself laying out the meager contents of the larder, and when all was ready, the man moved forward from the dim corner and took his place at the table under the little square window. He ate wolfishly, his eyes fixed greedily on the food before him, and the old woman assiduously replenished cup and plate as they became empty. At the same time she gradually realized his unkempt condition, but said nothing until he had finished his meal and thrown himself, with a grunt of satisfaction, back into the rickety armchair.

"I'm afraid, John," she queried, timidly, "you've been seein' hard times?"

"You're about right there, mother," he answered. "I've been on the road this last couple o' years. On tramp, yer knows."

"Poor boy." She patted his hand. "Never mind, you'll stay with me now in your home."

"That's just what I can't do, and it's what I want ter talk ter yer about. Yer see, I got into a little trouble wi' the perlecce last night a few miles back along. A open window, yer knows——"

"Oh, John! The perlecce!"

The old woman commenced to walk distractedly up and down the room.

"But they'll [illegible] if I can [illegible]"

He hesitated a second and then continued, roughly, "[illegible]

"It's all I've got, John—ten and nine it is, an' I was keepin'—never mind, take it, my boy—I——"

Then with a sudden access of terror she pushed him out into the main street.

"Oh! go, my boy, go! They may be coming now."

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS
It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amount necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 500 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE [illegible] YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered [illegible] alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

MAN AND A BAT

By Frank Savile

Gwendoline's theory of bats is simple, and is as follows: They spend days of heavy sleep and evil dreams, she maintains, in order that with the falling of the dusk they may sally out and fall upon headless maidens, within whose tresses they have a mad desire to roost.

Had I passed languidly one night from sleep into full consciousness, was the rain pattering upon the roof, was the breeze whispering in the venetian blind, was the distant mutter of a train creeping through the stillness?

No. They weren't. Not any of them. But something—and it was my instinctive sense of humor rather than my ears which told me what—was whirring softly to and fro just below the level of the ceiling. It was a ceaseless, monotonous, purring noise, which sung backwards and forwards over my head like a shuttle through a loom.

There was no room for doubt. Unintentionally we were extending hospitality to a bat.

I chuckled. I shook. Suddenly the whirr sunk swiftly down. The draught of something which passed silkily swept across my face.

"Golumph!" gobbled Gwendoline. "Golumph!"

She moved restlessly, still in the thrall of sleep, though the drowsy chains were strained to breaking.

Again the passing of a softness stirred my whiskers.

"Ee—ee—ee!"

Gwendoline's voice rose, and then suddenly failed as if by action of an extinguisher. The bed clothes heaved violently. A muffled, strangled appeal reached me as if from a living tomb.

"Chase it away! Chase it away!"

I stretched out a hand, and found the matches. I lit the candle.

I looked at the pillow. No signs of Gwendoline's pink cheeks and golden hair. Nothing, in fact, of the kind. Gwendoline had become a lump, a mere excrescence of bed clothing which merely hinted at, but did not reveal, her seclusion. From her privacy she continued to stimulate me to action.

"Kill it! Knock it down," she gasped. "Destroy it—get rid of it. I'm suffocating!"

"You allude to the bat?" I hazarded.

I found my slippers. I took the shovel from the fender. I advanced meaning to strike, to strike hard, and to strike but once. I pictured in imagination the shadows of doom which were closing round that furry, beady-eyed, contemptuously swinging body.

I raised my weapon—I banged with hideous violence.

Upon the instant he dropped, and like a stone, swooping straight at the candle in my hand. The blow, and the extinguishing of the light were so simultaneous that it seemed as if the fall of the curtain pole, which dropped with stupendous clatter, was the logical result of the darkness. Half a dozen curtain rings slid heavily upon my foot. I addressed a few words impartially to the night, to the bat, and to any sympathetic soul who cared to listen.

Gwendoline replied with a monosyllable. "Hush!" she reproved in vaulted tones.

"Hush," I retorted. "Hush yourself. If ten pounds of brass fell upon your toe—I—"

"I'm sorry—I'm sorry," she tempted. "But drive it out—oh, drive it out!"

He was sullenly clasping the iron rail of the bedstead, a short foot above Gwendoline's shrouded head!

We stared at each other, the bat and I, across the white bed, and the dishevelled bed clothes. An unpardonable impulse gripped me.

I continued to stand still.

The counterpane rippled in sign of my wife's impatience.

"What are you doing?" she demanded. "Is he gone?"

"We are resting—both of us," said I coldly.

"Resting! Resting! What in the world—"

"Would you like to advise upon the situation?" I interrupted. "He's been too much for me twice already."

Whoof—Poof—Ugh! Straight out of the darkness he had come, thudding home like a prize fighter upon my chest. I stepped back in a sitting posture.

If Gwendoline's bonnet box had not broken my fall. But there, fortunately it did. What is a smashed bonnet box in comparison with a possibly broken limb? Nothing—nothing! I said so.

I rose from the debris, breathing hard, and for my shovel substituted a towel. Grimly, resolutely, I began to chase him from coign to coign. I flapped—he flapped. Ornaments flew from the chimney piece, pictures rattled to the floor. The dressing-table was upset. Down in the outhouse the dogs, convinced of burglarious entry, barked resentfully into the night. Still the contest endured, at first, on my part, in calm resolution, then wrathfully, and at last in mere slam-dam hysterical mania to kill my foe if I had, like Samson, to pull the house about his head.

Finally I trod upon the teeth of Gwendoline's comb.

I sat down. I nursed my foot—the same foot which had been already mutilated by the curtain rings—and I explained exactly how I felt in the matter. Gwendoline made no remark of a sympathetic nature. Quite the contrary, indeed. The bat also enjoyed a rest.

And then a great—a Machiavellian—notion entered my head. I rose, placed the looking-glass upon the window-sill, and the lighted candle exactly in front of it. I tottered up to mine adversary, where he had slung himself from another picture chain, and made a feint at him.

What a triumph for intellect! In Bull Right he charged the light and the dancing reflection, thundering against the mirror. He fell senseless at its foot.

And thus came victory. I gathered up the limp body—I cast it out into the night—I closed the window. Weary, but flushed with full success, I turned to seek the balm of sleep well earned.

Take it all round, pictures, lamp-glasses and dressing-table, I think his destruction cost me anything between two and three pounds sterling.

WHAT A C.P.R. FIREMAN OWES TO ZAM-BUK.

George H. Duffus of Robertson St., Fort William, a C. P. R. fireman, says: "The water gauge of my locomotive burst and scalded the whole left side of my face terribly. I had a box of Zam-Buk in my pocket, which I was using for a sore on my lip, and when I had recovered from the first shock of the accident, I produced the balm and had it applied freely to the scalded parts. I was suffering acute agony, but within a wonderfully short time Zam-Buk gave me ease. I was able to continue my journey and upon reaching home, I obtained more Zam-Buk and continued the treatment. Zam-Buk acted wonderfully well, and in a few days had the wound nicely healing. I don't know anything so fine as Zam-Buk as a healer of burns, scalds, cuts, and similar injuries, which workers are so liable to, and, in my opinion, a box of Zam-Buk should be kept handy in every worker's home."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises, and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

Thousands Perish in Rushing Waters

Shanghai, China, Jan. 9.—Thousands of persons are reported to have been drowned, other thousands are starving and whole villages have been swept away by the terrible floods which have swept nearly 7,000 square miles of the Province of Anhui. The scene of the flood is situated between Hwai and Kwo rivers. When the waters reached on the farms they destroyed practically all the crops and left the inhabitants, 25,000 in number, in famine.

Robber bands have been terrorizing surrounding country.

Desperate at the prospects of starvation and armed to the teeth, scores of these bandits have descended upon nearby towns and almost swept them clear of provisions. Many persons have been killed in these raids.

FIERCE BLIZZARD STRIKES BRANDON

WITH THERMOMETER 18 BELOW ZERO THE WIND IS SIMPLY TERRIFIC.

Business is Suspended—Hardly Anything Doing in Shops—Many of the Girls Didn't Try to Get to Work.

Brandon, Jan. 9.—With the thermometer eighteen below zero, one of the fiercest blizzards seen in years has been raging since early morning. With the terrific east winds blowing it is almost impossible for pedestrains to make headway along the streets. Workmen had great difficulty in getting to work and many working girls did not make an attempt to come down town.

Business in the city stores is practically at a standstill.

The early trains on the roads had great difficulty in getting out and indications are that these will get stalled as reports from the country are bad.

DEAD ANARCHISTS BOMB MAKERS

Glass Tubes and Nitro-Glycerine was Found in Ruins of House After Their Death.

London, Jan. 9.—That the anarchists killed in the battle of Sydney street last Tuesday were bomb makers, was established beyond all doubt to-day, when glass tubes and nitro glycerine were found in the ruins of the houses where the men met their death. It was also reported that the remains of a third body had been discovered.

The inquest into the death of the anarchists was resumed this morning before Coroner Batter.

Testimony was given establishing the identity of one of the dead anarchists as Jos. Rudgewietz, who Scotland Yard says, has an international police record.

190 Men Entombed And Forty were Killed

(Special to The Times.)

Santander, Spain, Jan. 10.—One hundred and ninety workmen in the Anita mine at Castro, Urdiales, were entombed and forty were killed when the roof of the mine caved in to-day. Rescue parties were able to rescue the remaining 150 miners, five of whom are so badly injured that it is feared they will die.

SHE CURED HER HEART DISEASE

WHEN SHE CURED HER KIDNEYS WITH DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mrs. Henry J. Jacques Found a Speedy Relief for all Her Troubles, and Now Enjoys the Best of Health.

St. Rose du Lac, Man., Jan. 10.—(Special)—That Heart Disease is one of the results of disordered Kidneys, and is consequently easily cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, is the experience of Mrs. Henry J. Jacques of this place.

"My heart troubled me all the time," said Mrs. Jacques in an interview, "And I knew what terrible results might follow. The fact that my limbs would swell and my back ache led me to believe that I also suffered from Kidney Disease, so I determined to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I bought four boxes, and before I had finished the third box, the swelling was gone, my back was well, and my heart no longer troubled me. I am now in the best of health, and I owe it all to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Heart Disease is one of the troubles that come from unhealthy Kidneys. They fail to strain the impurities out of the blood, and those impurities are bound to affect the heart, which is the engine that propels the blood through the body. To cure Heart Disease cure the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills; to prevent Heart Disease keep the Kidneys right up and healthy by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

SAND SWEPT OFF THE SIDEWALKS

A city official complained to the Times that some of our merchants are having their employees sweep from off the sidewalk fronting their premises the sand sprinkled thereon to provide reasonably sure footing for pedestrians these slippery days. At yesterday noon, the absence of sand on one side of George street was glaringly apparent, while the work of sand sprinklers remained very much in evidence on the opposite sidewalk. In this connection it might be opportune to point out that the Corporation's policy of furnishing sure footing for pedestrians on icy walks should commend itself to all in that it not only consults the comfort of citizens in general, but also protects the city's interests in case of accident. It may be objected that sand is an unpleasant substance to have carried into one's store, but this apparently is the only method available of rendering sidewalks safe on slippery days, unless it be that of keeping sidewalks absolutely clear of ice, which is apparently a task, too difficult for any citizen or business man to undertake.

HON. CLIFFORD SIFTON'S ABLE ADDRESS TO THE CANADIAN CLUB

SPOKE OF THE VAST NATURAL WEALTH OF THE COUNTRY—OUTLINED GROWTH OF CONSERVATION MOVEMENT.

Dealt With the Question of Water Powers—The Old View of Private Rights in Water Power Was Rapidly Disappearing — Predicted That in a Few Years Dominion Legislation Would Prevent Private Monopoly of Any Water Powers.

The Canadian Club banquet at the National Hotel last night was one of the most successful in its history. The viands were exceptionally tasty while the address to the club was of an exceptionally high order.

Dr. Cameron, the president of the Canadian Club, said he thought the subject of the speech, which was to come, should be close to the hearts of everyone. It gave him great pleasure to call upon Hon. Clifford Sifton for the address of the evening.

Mr. Sifton was received with great applause. He thanked the president for his kind words and, though it was his first trip to Peterborough, he met many old friends.

VAST NATURAL WEALTH.

In summarizing the vast natural wealth of the country, the speaker declared that as yet nobody had any idea of what production the country was and would be capable of, particularly as regarded agriculture, mineral, electrical power, or timber.

The far north was yet to be gone over, and its wealth of mineral and water powers developed by future generations. Hudson Bay, the speaker predicted, would be prolific of traffic, and the clay belt of Northern Ontario would yet be one of the greatest agricultural districts, in the Dominion. So, too, with the West, recent surveys having shown great tracts of fertile territory, the existence of which was hardly dreamed of a few years ago. From Hudson Bay to the Rockies was a territory great in the means of producing wealth, with the Peace River country soon to be settled. The speaker outlined the growth of the conservation movement and then generally described the steps now being taken along this line in Canada.

The question of water powers was first dealt with. Regarding this Hon. Mr. Sifton declared that the old view of private rights in water powers was rapidly disappearing as a result of recent discussion and agitation. Quebec and Ontario had led the way in this respect by legislation containing the organiz principle of limited franchises and private control. By the end of four years Mr. Sifton believed that Dominion-wide legislation would prevent a private monopoly of any water powers. The Conservation Commission had found it necessary to combat legislation inimical to this principle, and in some cases bills had been thrown out and others modified.

Timber resources and measures taken to save the supply present and future supplies formed the subject of the second general topic. An estimate, Mr. Sifton said, had been made that the timber supply of the United States under present conditions would have completely disappeared in twenty-five years. At the same rate of consumption Canada's supply would have vanished in seven years and this was a matter of the utmost importance in connection with the question of reciprocity.

The speaker felt sure that if properly looked after there was enough timber in Canada for all our own people for all time to come, but he was sure too, there was none to give away, and would not be surprised if the export of lumber would yet have to be entirely prohibited.

Touching on agriculture, the speaker remarked that the improvements of agriculture was a branch of conservation from which, perhaps, the greatest and most prolific of all results might be expected. A great and magnificent work, he said, was being done in this way in Ontario, a work that was probably neither properly understood or appreciated by the people of that province.

In conclusion the speaker declared that the nations of the world which had fallen had been those which exhausted their natural resources. Egypt was an example. Once it was the granary of the world, and then became a desert until it was again being reclaimed by British energy.

Mr. R. R. Hall, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Sifton, said the Honourable gentleman was the right man in the right place.

Judge Huyoke in seconding Mr. Hall's motion, said he remembered two brothers at his Alma Mater, one is now Premier of Alberta, and the other is the Hon. Clifford Sifton, chairman of the Conservation Commission, and then before the club.

MR. SIFTON'S REPLY.

Dr. Cameron extended the vote of thanks to Mr. Sifton, who, in reply said, it was always a pleasure to speak upon a subject for the good of the public. The members of his commission are both Liberals and Conservatives, and thus their decisions are non-partisan.

The enjoyable event was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

Rev. Dr. Simons will address the next meeting, January 19th.

POULTRY SHOW.

Over 1000 Birds Shown and More Entries to Come.

The Peterborough Poultry Association are holding their annual show in the market hall. Over 1000 birds are on exhibition and further entries expected. There is no lack of variety, though buff Orpingtons are the most common. Mr. Joseph Bennett, of Toronto, is the judge. Many local entries are being made including white rocks from the Peterborough Fire Department.

School children will be admitted after 4 o'clock, for 5 cents. None should fail to see this fine exhibition of birds.

DAILY STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Between Trenton and Georgian Bay When Trent Valley Canal is Completed.

Harwood, Jan. 9.—It is the intention of the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company, upon the completion of the Trent Valley Canal, to have a daily line of steamers between Trenton and Georgian Bay. The company propose covering the whole waterway connecting Rice Lake and Lake Simcoe. Their steamers on Lake Simcoe will make daily trips between local towns. From Bobcaygeon another steamer will run to Peterborough and Rice Lake. In addition to the tourist traffic which these steamers will cater to, there is also a large amount of freight to handle, including merchandise and farm, forest and mineral products. The company has acquired the fleet of the Otonabee Navigation Company Limited.

FINTON TRIAL TO BE DELAYED

Case May Not Proceed Until Wednesday—Soon to Be Tried for Murder.

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 9.—The January Assizes of the High Court will open this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, with Mr. Justice Teetzel presiding, but the trial of Thomas Finton, on the charge of murdering his father, Elijah Finton, an aged Saltfleet farmer, on April 27th, may not begin until Wednesday.

The defence is not ready to go on to-day, and George Lynch Staunton, counsel for the prisoner, may ask for a short delay. Geo. Tate Blackstock, the crown prosecutor, may consent.

Mr. Staunton, accompanied by Mr. S. D. Biggar, K.C., the associate counsel, saw Finton this morning at the jail. A conference followed.

The crown will call about fifteen witnesses. The witnesses for the defence may not be so numerous, but will include Thomas Finton's wife and her sister.

Elijah Finton was found dead just outside the barn door on his farm, with his head crushed in. The old man's estate is said to have been worth $40,000.

Little Six-Year-Old Boy Burned to Death

(Special to The Times.)

Lindsay, Ont., Jan. 10.—Erastus Anderson, the six-year-old son of J. J. Anderson, of Harvey, six miles north of Bobcaygeon, was burned to death in his cot last night at nine o'clock. He was in bed with his little sister, whose life was saved by W. Laird, who noticed the fire. The flames were too fierce to allow him to return for the boy. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Eighty-Five Men Were Probably Drowned

(Special to The Times.)

Astrakhan, Russia, Jan. 10.—Eighty-five fishermen were carried out into the Caspian Sea on an ice flow to-day.

A steamer from Baku went to the rescue of the men, but the chances that any of the number will escape death were poor.

Dear Sir and Brother,—On many occasions this camp has experienced your kindliness in giving assistance to its work, and your readiness to answer any call made upon you for your attendance at any special function designed to further the progress of Woodcraft.

It is only natural that, especially at this happy time, the beginning of a New Year, we should take advantage of the season, as well as of your presence with us, to give you a tangible token of our esteem for your self.

We ask you to accept therefore, the accompanying gift as a small token to express in some measure, how much we value the interest you have taken in our welfare, and in helping to promote good work and fellowship among us in the greater realization of the underlying principles of our esteemed order of Woodmen of the World.

We have honor to be fraternally yours, on behalf of Sherwood Camp W. of W.

GOT IT.

Got Something Else, Too.

"I liked my coffee strong and I drank it strong," says a Penn. woman, telling a good story. "and although I had headaches nearly every day I just would not believe there was any connection between the two. I had weak and heavy spells and palpatation of the heart, too, and although husband told me he thought it was coffee that made me so poorly, and did not drink it himself, or he said that it did not agree with him, yet I loved my coffee and thought I just couldn't do without it.

"One day a friend called at my home—that was a year ago. I spoke about how well she was looking and she said:

"'Yes, and I feel well, too. It's because I am drinking Postum in place of ordinary coffee.'

"I said, 'What is Postum?'

"Then she told me how it was a food-drink and how much better she felt since using it in place of coffee or tea, so I sent to the store and bought a package and when it was made according to directions it was so good I have never bought a pound of coffee since. I began to improve immediately.

"I cannot begin to tell you how much better I feel since using Postum and leaving coffee alone. My health is better than it has been for years and I cannot say enough in praise of this delicious food drink."

Take away the destroyer and put a builder to work and Nature will do the rest. That's what you do when Postum takes coffee's place in your diet. "There's a Reason."

Mr. Foster's Prediction—U.S. Congressman Says That War is Unlikely Between Japan and America Over the Philippines.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Official circles of the capital are to-day discussing with intense interest startling assertions made last night by representative David J. Foster of Vermont, chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. He declared that war between the United States and Japan over the Philippine Islands is unlikely, because, if Japan wants them the United States would gladly give the Islands to her. This declaration was made in the course of an address on international peace before a church club. The speaker characterized the Philippines as a "lemon" on the hands of United States, and then predicted world peace by a Union of the United States, Japan, France and England to preserve international order.

SETTLE ALL DISPUTES

"In five years a treaty for the settlement of international disputes will be entered into by the United States, Japan, France and England," said Representative Foster.

These four nations, banded together will be a means of compelling the rest of the world to follow their example. The result will be an international court for the judicial settlement of international disputes, established at The Hague, and world peace.

The Family Physician Creates a Sensation in the Schenk Case

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 10.—The prosecution in the trial of Mrs. Laura Farnswort Schenk set out to-day to stage in elaborate detail the alleged plot by which Mrs. Schenk tried to put her millionaire husband, John O. Schenk, out of the way by poison, even at the risk of sacrificing the lives of her little children to consummate her aim.

Mrs. Schenk was smiling when she entered the court room and showed no trepidation over the scathing denouncement administered by Prosecuting Attorney Handlan in opening the case, nor did she indicate fear of the charges which the prosecutor declared he would prove.

BATH TUB MURDER HAS A QUEER END

MOTHER OF THE GIRL VICTIM CONFESSES TO INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Drop Case Against Aunt—Mrs. Snead Likely to be Freed—Her Sister Mrs. Wardlaw Died in Jail.

Newark, N.J., Jan. 10.—The trial of Mrs. Caroline B. Martin, jointly indicted with her sister, Mrs. Mary W. Snead, for the murder of Ocey W. M. Snead in East Orange, more than a year ago, came to a sudden end to-day, when Mrs. Martin entered a plea of guilty of involuntary manslaughter. This disposed of the most mysterious case in New Jersey criminal annals, but the mystery surrounding Ocey Snead's death remains unsolved. She was the daughter of Mrs. Marein, and following the discovery of her dead body in a bath tub in a meagrely furnished house in East Orange in November, 1909, her mother Mrs. Martin, and her aunts, Mrs. Virginia Wardlaw and Mrs. Maria Snead were arrested, charged with having poisoned her for the insurance she carried on her life.

This they denied, and the autopsy showed that Mrs. Snead had died of starvation, but whether she had also been poisoned has never been revealed. Mrs. Wardlaw died in jail, awaiting trial.

It has been the contention of the prosecution that Mrs. Wardlaw and Mrs. Snead were under the control of Mrs. Martin, and that they were hardly to blame for the death of Ocey Snead. Because of this fact, and the acceptance of the plea in the Martin case, it is likely that the indictment against Mrs. Mary Snead will be quashed.

BLOCK EXTRADITION

Porter Charlton's Parents Bound That Son Will Not Return to Italy.

Trenton, N.J., Can. 9.—The habeas Corpus proceedings to prevent the extradition of Porter Charlton to Italy to stand trial for the murder of his wife, Mary Scott Castle Charlton, again came up before Judge Reilstab in the United States Circuit Court here to-day. The Department of State at Washington has honored the request of the Italian Government for Charlton's extradition, but the turning over of the young man to the Italian authorities was blocked by Paul Charlton, the prisoner's father, who applied for the writ of Habeas Corpus.

WEDDING BELLS.

GUERIN—RANGER.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the church of the Sacred Heart, yesterday morning, when Miss Almeda Guerin and Mr. Anthony Ranger, were united in marriage by Father McCaul.

The bride was attended by her sister, Blanche Guerin, while Hildon Feely acted as best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Ranger will reside on Gladstone avenue.

FROWDE—HORSLEY.

The wedding was quietly solemnized at three o'clock yesterday afternoon at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Frowde 409 Walton street, of their only daughter, Alma May, and Gordon F. Horsley, of Edmonton, Alta.

Only a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. G. W. Henderson, of Charlotte street Methodist Church.

A dainty luncheon was served afterwards, provided by Coleman Bros.

Mr. and Mrs. Horsley left on the 5.35 G.T.R. for Edmonton, their future home, via St. Paul, the bride travelling in a tailored suit of navy blue with hat to match.

Impressed with the splendid service offered by the Grand Trunk Pacific boats.

The new steamships of the Grand Trunk Pacific Coast Steamship Co., operating between Seattle, Victoria, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, and the Portland Canal, are receiving pleasing encomiums regarding the service they are offering.

At Grand Trunk Pacific headquarters a letter has been received from a prominent member of the Government which reads as follows:

"I made so enjoyable a trip on the steamer 'Prince Rupert' to the north and return that I cannot allow the occasion to pass without congratulating you on the splendid service of that steamer.

A FLYING TRIP.

Across the Ocean by an English Journalist.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—The flying trip of the journalist from the staff of the London Daily Mail, has just concluded and the following is taken from an exchange:

The London Daily Mail's correspondent, Mr. W. R. Holt, has concluded his flying trip to this continent, and has established a journalistic record by covering 7,000 miles in twelve days, during which time he visited New York, Washington and Baltimore and interviewed the President of the United States and many other celebrities. But his achievement, after all, can only be described as a circus journalism. It was spectacular, but useless. The war correspondent who travels fifty miles on a camel, when he has never ridden a camel before, in order to get the news of a victory or a defeat to a telegraph office, has done a far more enterprising thing than Mr. Holt, who simply took a carefully arranged trip as fast as all the resources at his paper's command could carry him. The newspaper man who is dropped down in the middle of a desert, and left to his own devices to get his "scoop" on the cable wires, is a more interesting figure, and his success is a more telling tribute to the enterprise and initiative of his profession.

But while the Daily Mail's achievement is of no especial significance from a newspaper point of view, it serves to remind the public how small the world is getting, and how swift are the means of transport over land and sea. The Mauretania, on which Mr. Holt was a passenger, maintained an average speed of twenty-eight miles an hour on both her western and her eastward passage across the Atlantic. The train which carried him between Fishguard and London made the 261 miles in 272 minutes. For twelve days and nights Mr. Holt travelled at an average rate of 23 miles an hour, including the time which he spent in sightseeing and interviewing.

TRAVELLING PUBLIC PAY.

Railway Company Purchases Property Worth $500,000.

Large interests, probably either C.P.R. or Canadian Northern, are reported to have recently purchased property just north of the C.P.R. right-of-way in North Toronto worth $500,000. The prices paid are reported as being in many cases more than double the previously estimated value of the property.

This means an extra $250,000 or probably $500,000, when the rest of the property is secured, of extra capital on which the public will have to pay dividends.

We believe that folks who have no desire to move or sell should receive some compensation for their trouble, but isn't 100 per cent. pretty high, especially when the public have to pay it?

The man who lives in a rented house by the way, receives notice to quit, has all the trouble and the owner receives the compensation.

Why not have a law fixing the purchase price for expropriation at, say 120 per cent. of assessed value? This would give ample compensation, save the public millions of dollars, and at the same time induce property owners to see that their property was assessed at its fair value, neither too high for fear of taxes, nor too low for fear of expropriation.

far," was the quiet answer, and Chumru, placing his left hand on the Brahmin's mouth, plunged a long, thin knife up to the hilt between his ribs.

CHAPTER IX
A Long Chase

It was not Lawrence's order but Malcolm's own suggestion that led the desperate task entrusted to the young aide by the chief. While two score herdic volunteer horsemen drove back the enemy's cavalry and held the bridge over the Kokrali until the bulk of the army made good its retreat, Sir Henry halted by the roadside and watched the passing of his exhausted men. He had the aspect of one who hoped that some stray bullet would end the torment of life. In that grief stricken hour his indomitable spirit seemed to falter. Ere night he was the Lawrence of old, but the magnitude of the calamity that had befallen him was crushing and he winced beneath it.

Out of three hundred and fifty white soldiers in the column he had lost one hundred and nineteen. Every gun served by natives was captured by the enemy. Worst of all, the moral effect of such a defeat outweighed a dozen victories. It not only brought about the instant beginnings of the siege but its proportions were grossly exaggerated in the public eye. For the first time in many a year the white soldiers had fled before a strictly Indian force. They were outnumbered, which was nothing new in the history of the country, but it must be confessed they were outgeneraled, too. Lawrence, never a believer in Gubbins's forward policy, showed unwonted hesitancy even during the march to Chinhut: he halted, advanced and countermarched the troops in a way that was foreign to a man of his decisive character. Where he was unaccountably timid the enemy were unusually bold, and the outcome was disaster.

Yet in this moment of bitterest adversity he displayed that sympathy for the sufferings of others that won him the esteem of all who came in contact with him.

By some extraordinary blunder of the commissariat the 32nd had set forth that morning without breakfast their fast. Now, after a weary march and a protracted fight in the burning sun, some of the men deliberately lay down to die.

"We can go no farther," they said. "We may as well meet death here as a few yards away. And, when the sepoys overtake us, we shall at least have breath enough left to die fighting."

Lawrence, when finally he turned his horse's head toward Lucknow, came upon such a group. He shook his feet free of the stirrups.

"Now, my lads," he said quietly, "you have no cause to despair. Catch hold of the leathers, two of you, and the horse will help you along. Mr. Malcolm, you can assist in the same way. Another mile will bring us to the city."

One of the men, finding it in his heart to pity his haggard-faced general, thought to console him by saying:

"We'll try, if it's only to please you, your honor, but it's all up with us, I'm afraid. If the end doesn't come today it will surely be with us to-morrow."

"Why do you think that?" asked Lawrence. "We must hold the Residency until the last man falls. What else can we do?"

"I know that, your honor, but we haven't got that ghost of a chance. They're a hundred to one, and as well armed as we are." It 'ud be a different thing if help could come, but it can't. I what people are saying is true, sir, the nearest red-coats are at Allahabad, an' p'raps they're hard pressed, too."

"That is not the way to look at a difficulty. In war it is the unexpected that happens. Keep your spirits up and you may live to tell your grandchildren how you fought the rebels at Lucknow. I want you and every man in the ranks to know that my motto is 'No Surrender.' You have heard what happened at Cawnpore. Here, in Lucknow, despite to-day's disaster, we shall fight to a finish."

An English battery came thundering down the road to take up a fresh position and assist in covering the retreat. The guns unlimbered near a well.

"There!" said Lawrence, "you see how my words have come true. A minute ago you were ready to fall before the first sowar who lifted his saber over your head. Go now and help by drawing water for the gunners and yourselves. Then you can ride back on the carriages when they limber up."

Malcolm, to whom the soldier's words brought inspiration, spurred Nejdi alongside his chief.

"Will you permit me to ride to Allahabad, sir, and tell General Neill how matters stand here?" he said.

Lawrence looked at him as though the request were so fantastic that he had not fully grasped its meaning.

"To Allahabad?" he repeated, turning in the saddle to watch the effect of the first shot fired by the battery.

"Yes, sir," cried Malcolm, eagerly. "I know the odds are against me, but Hodson rode as far through the enemy's country only six weeks ago, and I did something of the kind, though not so successfully, when I went from Meerut to Agra and from Agra to Cawnpore."

"You had an escort, and I can spare not a man."

"I will go alone, sir."

"I would gladly avail myself of your offer, but the Residency will be invested in less than an hour."

"Let me go now, sir. I am well mounted. In the confusion I may be able to reach the open country without being noticed."

"Go, then, in God's name, and may your errand prosper, for you have many precious lives in your keeping."

Lawrence held out his hand, and Malcolm clasped it.

"Tell Neill," said the Chief Commissioner in a low tone of intense significance, "that we can hold out a fortnight, a month perhaps, or even a few days longer if buoyed up with hope. That is all. If you succeed, I shall not forget your services. The Viceroy has given me plenary powers, and I shall place your name in orders to-night, Captain Malcolm."

He kept his promise. When Luck-

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car. They should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $60000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neeve St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayafiete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinal twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive; below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

MAKING BREAD IN MANY WAYS

A Few of the Numerous Methods By Which It Is Manufactured

In visiting Greece I was struck with the primitive ovens built behind most of the houses in small towns, says a Greece letter in the Bakers' Weekly. They were like large beehives, built of clay; they were evidently solid up to the sole, then had the arched roof over, with a door at one side. They are heated with fires of straw and twigs.

In some places we find holes dug in the earth and lined with stones in which a fire is kept burning until sufficient heat is raised, the bread being then put in and a stone laid over the opening, with a fire on it to keep up the cooking heat.

In these ovens, we are told, the South Sea Islanders bake their bread, fruit, yams and roast pork, and doubtless they answer the purposes very well. In some eastern countries fire is put into a large earthen jar with small mouth and sloping sides, the cakes of bread being stuck on the outside of the jar to bake.

Then we know the old fashioned girdle, so much used in old Scotch houses, on which scones, bannocks and oatcakes are fried. This is also employed in Scandinavia for baking the universal "Flad brod," and it is also in use in many other countries in various shapes.

In Cornwall the old kettle style of oven is still used for home baking, the dough being laid on the hot hearthstone with a large round iron pot inverted over it. Fire outside of this keeps up the baking heat and the Cornish "kettle bread" is very good eating indeed, even if it is a little pudgingly in the centre sometimes.

Even more primitive means of baking have to be used sometimes, as when the Austrian digger rolls up his "damper" in leaves and covers it with hot ashes to bake; but still all methods from hot stones to draw plate ovens are used for the one great purpose, to make bread, and the variety of means used for this end goes to show the universal importance of that article. Regular bakehouses with proper ovens seem to have been in use, however, for hundreds of years, and doubtless many relics of them are still in existence.

CLEANING AND POLISHING

How to Keep Glass and Silver Ware In Good Condition

A chamois of extra fine quality, put up in clean, separate oiled paper packages, is now to be had. One can polish glass, silver or enamel with it, using any of the usual polishing agents, then wash and dry the chamois, with the happiest of results. It will not become hard and stiff. When dry it may be pulled in shape and will be found as soft as when purchased. This has been tested in our Experimental Station, in comparison with higher priced imported skins, much to the disadvantage of the latter.

The larger pieces of silver, especially the ornamental pieces, hard to clean, may be immersed in a bath of boiling water to which considerable washing soda or borax has been added. Let boil for an hour, then dry, and polish with chamois and whiting. Rub a paste of whiting on the smaller silver and then polish with the chamois. This paste is best made with alcohol. If ammonia is used the silver will have to be repolished sooner.

The cleaning of table pads is a problem. The small asbestos pads may be cleansed by putting them in the furnace and letting them burn clean, a plan which is not feasible with the pad that covers the table. This will have to be cleaned with benzine, sponging the spots as in the case of any fabric.—Good Housekeeping.

PRIDE TOOK A FALL

Once upon a time a poor beggar man, who lived in a country where the king was called a Sultan, stood in a street and begged.

By and by there came walking along the street a man who was dressed in very fine clothes.

The beggar, who knew that such a man would have money in his pocket, cried out in a loud voice for help. Now the man in very fine clothes lived in the palace of the Sultan, and he was called the Sultan's favourite. But instead of giving the beggar man some money he just picked up a stone from the ground and threw it at him. And the beggar man picked up the stone and put it into his pocket.

"Perhaps some day," said he, "I shall be able to throw it back at the haughty fellow and revenge myself."

Well, week after week passed by, and at last the beggar saw the haughty man who had thrown the stone at him riding on the back of a camel. But the man was not haughty now for the Sultan had sent him away. And as he rode on the back of the camel to prison all the other beggar men threw stones at him.

The beggar man took his stone out of his pocket. But instead of throwing it he dropped it onto the ground.

"No," said the beggar man, "I will not throw it back, though he threw it at me. It is mean and cruel to revenge oneself on a man who has become poor and unhappy."

CONCERNING FRUIT

Should be Taken at Meal-time, Not Between Meals

The juices of fruits are highly valuable as means of cleansing the stomach and alimentary canal. Disease-producing germs cannot grow in them to any extent. This is particularly true of the juice of raw fruits. Cooked fruits, such as baked apples, prune puree and other soft fruit pulps, may be used without injury, if free from cane sugar and not eaten with cow's milk. Fruit should be taken at regular meal times, not between meals. It combines especially well with cereal foods. About the only precaution which need be given in relation to fruits is that they do not form a good combination with coarse vegetables. This fact explains many cases of serious gastric disturbance. Thoroughly healthy persons do not always need to observe the rule to avoid the use of fruits and vegetables at the same meal, provided all the food is thoroughly chewed, but invalids, and especially persons with dilated stomach or slow digestion, will generally be greatly benefited by observing this precaution. HOW TO WASH WINDOWS

A Method Which Saves Both Time and Labor

Strange as it may seem, there is a right and wrong way to wash windows, and as this operation is usually dreaded, the following method will doubtless be appreciated, as it saves both time and labor. Choose a dull day, or at least a time when the sun is not shining on the windows, for when the sun shines on the window it causes it to be dry streaked, no matter how much it is rubbed. Take a painter's brush and dust them inside and out, brushing all the woodwork inside before touching the glass. The latter must be washed slowly in warm water diluted with ammonia—do not use soap. Use a small cloth with a pointed stick to get the dust out of the corners; wipe dry with a soft piece of cotton cloth—do not use linen, as it makes the glass linty when dry. Polish with tissue paper or old newspaper. You will find that this can be done in half the time taken where soap is used, and the result will be brighter windows.—The Storekeeper.

DRUG STORES ON SHIPS

As a result of representations made by the General Shipowners' Society, London, the Board of Trade is now reconsidering the scale of drugs prescribed for use on board ships. It has been found that many of the drugs which vessels are compelled to carry are never used, while others which should form part of the medical equipment of every ship, are omitted. With a view to assisting the Board of Trade to arrive at a decision on the subject medical officers of the leading steamship lines have formulated a modern list of supplies which there is reason to believe will be adopted. In drawing this up regard has been had to faster passages now made by steamers as compared with the days of sailing ships, when the existing scale was prescribed.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE STORY

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says:—A new and characteristic story of Florence Nightingale reaches me. She was a great admirer of Harriet Martineau, but Miss Martineau's inclination towards Atheism was a cause of regret and grief to her. When the news came of the authoress's death in unbelief, and friends, shocked and stern, were making remarks about her sad end and her lost soul, Florence Nightingale smiled as she said, "How glorious must have been her surprise when she woke in Paradise to find she had been mistaken."

A LIMITED COLLECTION

They tell in London a story of an elderly lady who, while sight-seeing, visited Westminster Abbey. After going about for some time with an air of eager curiosity, she approached a verger. "I wonder if you can help me?" she asked, hopefully. "I am looking for the grave of King Edward II."

"Sorry, ma'am," said the verger, apologetically, "but we 'aven't got Edward II."

"But," protested the visitor, "I understood that the Abbey was the burial place of kings."

"So it is, ma'am, in a way," returned the verger, "but we only 'ave the odd numbers 'ere."

A NOVEL MEMORIAL

The village of Milton has been one of the first in the country to perpetuate the memory of King Edward. A subscription list has been opened, and with the money obtained books are to be purchased for use in the church. They will be bound in morocco, and bear an inscription explaining the objects of their provision surmounted by the royal arms.

BELOW THE SALT

Servants are becoming so particular nowadays, writes Rosaline in Black and White, that when a certain mistress asked her departing cook if she had got a good place to go to, it was not wholly surprising that the latter should reply. "Oh, yes, Mem, the lady seems all right. Before I decided, I looked her up in Kelly."

ONE OF LIFE'S COMMAS

By Ada Cook

"And you are still Nora Carstairs"—he asked, as they met at the dance, and his tone bore a slightly anxious inflection.

"Yes!" she laughed. "Still Nora Carstairs; but when did you arrive?"

"Only yesterday. How strange it does seem to be in England again! I thought of you, and intended seeking you out; and here am I face to face with you; my usual good luck. I have returned a financial success, and now I find you, the one I most desired to see."

"And so you have come back to swell the limited ranks of eligible bachelors?"

"Not for long, I hope," he answered, gazing into her eyes. "I am seriously thinking of settling down."

"Quite time, too," she answered, with a little maternal decision in her tone. "You have but to throw the glove, and title, family, beauty, may all be yours. The highest bidder takes all prizes, matrimonial included. Heigh-ho! there is nothing that wealth cannot buy."

"Except love," he interrupted gravely for her light tone jarred him.

"Love?" she laughed. "Has it come to this? Do you now set store by that commodity?"

"Yes," he answered. "I will have the best, and—love with it. But you are ironical, Nora. Well, I suppose I deserve your banter; and yet I am in deadly earnest. Ten years have changed me. I find that I have missed the best things in life whilst pursuing what can never satisfy. What I want now, I pray it may not be too late to obtain." His voice was low and earnest.

"Is the thing we want always the best thing for us?" she asked softly, averting her head so that she might not appear to see the earnest look in his eyes. "Do we know what is best?"

"Sometimes," he answered boldly. "Ah! Nora, our happiness—yours and mine—ten years ago, was worth all this wealth and show."

"Did you then think so?" she asked. "Ten years, how they have flown! And in their flight how many hearts have been broken, how many healed? Again, how many crushed to the earth which it has bid arise? Ten years ago, Geoffrey, I was twenty and you were twenty-six—and so; you sometimes think of those days?"

"Yes," he said, noting the changing inflections in her rich, low voice, "for then I rushed away from love to seek wealth; now I would leave wealth could I find love."

"Then life has taught you that lesson? Well, the world holds many loving hearts."

"But not the love I want," he cried vehemently.

"And you?" he asked. "Has life satisfied you? Have you found—love?"

"Yes," she answered, and over her face flashed a transforming light. "But, wait! I forgot. I thought you knew?"

He could not speak. A leaden weight seemed to have attached itself to his heart. Then her voice, rich, soft and clear, held his attention, and he listened, watching the dark shadows her hair threw into her lovely eyes.

"When you first went away, Geoff, I waited in vain for your first letter. It never came. I thought my heart was broken. Did you get my little, pitiful letters? Did you not read there how I craved for a word, a sign, from you? Do you remember?"

"It is so long ago," he answered. "And I—"

"Yes," she interrupted. "I knew what you would say. So long ago, and you were busy gathering the wealth you now despise; but in your pursuit you had adventure, change, whilst I could only eat my foolish little heart out in silence at home, alone. I thought my heart was dead, but I rose above myself at last, and sought work. I became a nurse. I worked—how I worked—and then—you know my cousin, Dr. Gilbert Carstairs?"

"Yes; he is now a famous specialist I believe."

"Yes; he helped me; he was kind to me; and I became his wife. My love for him showed me that my love for you had been but a girlish infatuation, so you see I am still Nora Carstairs. Oh! here comes my husband to claim his dance."

He saw the glance and smile with which she greeted the tall grave man who came towards her. He stood and watched them dance, not missing one glance of love and confidence which passed between them, and then he turned and left the room.

He felt that the gates of heaven had been opened and then slammed in his face.

Wealth he had—but love had left him.

PROUD TO BE A BEGGAR

They said that I was the greatest beggar in the world, always begging for money, money. But they forget that I begged not for myself, but for others. I am proud to be a beggar, and I would not mind if when I am dead they put over my grave a stone or marble monument in the shape of a collection box, so that even when dead I might still be begging for the poor.—General Booth.

CHESS IN PRISONS

In German prisons chess clubs are by no means uncommon. They are encouraged by the authorities as providing healthy mental relaxation for well-conducted prisoners. Recently the inmates of Brixton Prison have been regaled with oratorios, while at Aylesbury there are lectures and services of song.

WATER IN LONDON

The quantity of water used last year for washing streets and courts in the City of London was 77,434,000 gallons.

THE NEW EDUCATION

By Elbert Hubbard

You will remember that we used to be told, very often, that, "Children should be seen and not heard."

We know better now—let the babies talk. God-bless 'em!

The healthy, active child is full of impressions, and that he should express himself is just as natural as for a bird to sing.

It is Nature's way of giving growth—no one knows a thing for sure until he tells it to someone else.

We deepen impressions by recalling them, and to suppress and reproof the child habitually when he wants to tell of the curious things he has seen is to display a two-by-four acumen.

Not long ago, on a horseback ride in the provinces, I came to an out-of-the-way school. This particular school would not have attracted my attention specially had I not noticed that nearly half the school lot was taken up with a garden and flower beds.

No house was near and it was apparent that this garden was the work of the teacher and scholars.

Straightway I dismounted, tied my horse and walked into the school-house.

The teacher was a man of middle age—a hunchback, and one of the rarest, gentlest spirits I have ever met.

Have you noticed what an alert, receptive and beautiful soul is often housed in a misshapen body?

This man was modest and shy as a woman, and when I spoke of the flower beds, he half apologised for them and tried to change the subject.

When, after a few moments, he realized that my interest in his garden was something deeper than mere curiosity, he offered to go out with me and show me what had been done. So we walked out, and out, too, behind us trooped the school of just fifteen scholars.

"You see," he said, "in winter we have sixty or more pupils, but the school is small now. I thought I would try the plan of teaching out of doors half the time, and to keep the girls and boys busy I just let each scholar have a flower bed. Some wanted to raise vegetables, and, of course, I let them plant any seed they wished. The older children, girls or boys, help the younger ones—it is lots of fun. When the weather is fine we are out here a good deal of the time, just working and talking."

And that is the way this man taught—letting the children do things, and talk. He explained to me that he was not an "educated" man, and as I contradicted him my eyes filled with tears.

Not educated? I wonder how many of us who call ourselves educated have a disciplined mind, and can call by name the forest birds in our vicinity?

Do we know the bird-notes when we hear them?

Can we with pencil outline the leaves of oak, elm, maple, chestnut, hazel, walnut, birch or beech trees, as others familiar with these trees can recognise them?

Do we know by name or on sight the insects that fill the Summer nights with melody? Do we know what they feed upon, and how long they live?

Do we know for sure how much a bushel of wheat weighs?

I wonder what it is to be educated!

* * * * * *

Here was a man seemingly sore smitten by the hand of Fate, and yet whose heart was filled with sympathy and love. He had no quarrel either with the world or Destiny. He was childless that he might love all children, and that his heart might go out to every living thing.

The trustees of the school did not take much interest in methods, I found, so they let the teacher have his way; and I have since been told that the best schools are those where the trustees or directors take no interest in the institution.

A rare collection of birds' eggs, fungi and forest leaves had been made, and I was shown outline drawings of all the leaves in the garden. This idea of drawing a picture of the object led to a much closer observation, the teacher thought. And when I found, on questioning some of the children, that the whole school took a semi-weekly ramble through the woods, and made close studies of the wild birds, as well as insects, it came to me that this man, afar from any "intelligent centre," was working out a pedagogic system that science could never improve upon.

* * * * * *

Whether the little man realised this or not, I cannot say, but I do not think he guessed the greatness of his work and methods. It was all so simple—he did the thing he liked to do, and led the children out, and they followed because they loved the man, and soon loved the things that he loved.

Science seeks to simplify. This country school teacher, doing his own little work in his own little way, was a true scientist. And he was also a great teacher; he was moulding human lives, and filling the minds of his children with beautiful and useful impressions.

STOLE FOR DYING SON

J. P.'s Unaffected by Story of a Woman's Terrible Struggle

Despite the pathos of a story told to the Enfield magistrates when Lizzie Penfold, aged 41, was charged with stealing articles from laundries at which she had been employed, it did not appear to awaken a very responsive feeling in the hearts of the magistrates. Inspector Twigg said the prisoner's son, aged 22, is dying of consumption, and is not expected to live a week. It was to provide for him that the woman stole. "Speaking as an ordinary individual, and not as a police officer, I do not know to what extent I would have gone had I been in the prisoner's place," he added. So touched was one of the prosecutors that he withdrew from the case. "The woman has had a terrible struggle for the sake of her son," said the vicar of St. Luke's, Enfield. Nevertheless, she was fined $25, or a month's imprisonment in default.

THE LARGEST CRAB

The largest crab in the world, a specimen of the giant spider crab from Japan, is at the Museum of Natural History, New York. The spread of the two largest legs, or arms, having sawlike teeth, called "pincers," is nearly twelve feet, and the body portion is over one foot in diameter and about the size of a large dinner-plate. The monster crab inhabits the sea and islands of Japan, and is known to occur at depths of over two thousand feet.

WHAT FEW REALIZE

There is a time when one looks towards forty as the fringe of the Arctic zone of life. No one realizes that there is a broad temperate belt of middle age, wherein men can labor hard, long, and fruitfully.—Mr. Lloyd George.

MILK POINTS

Don't keep milk where it will be warmer than 50 degrees.

Don't leave it in an open dish or pan.

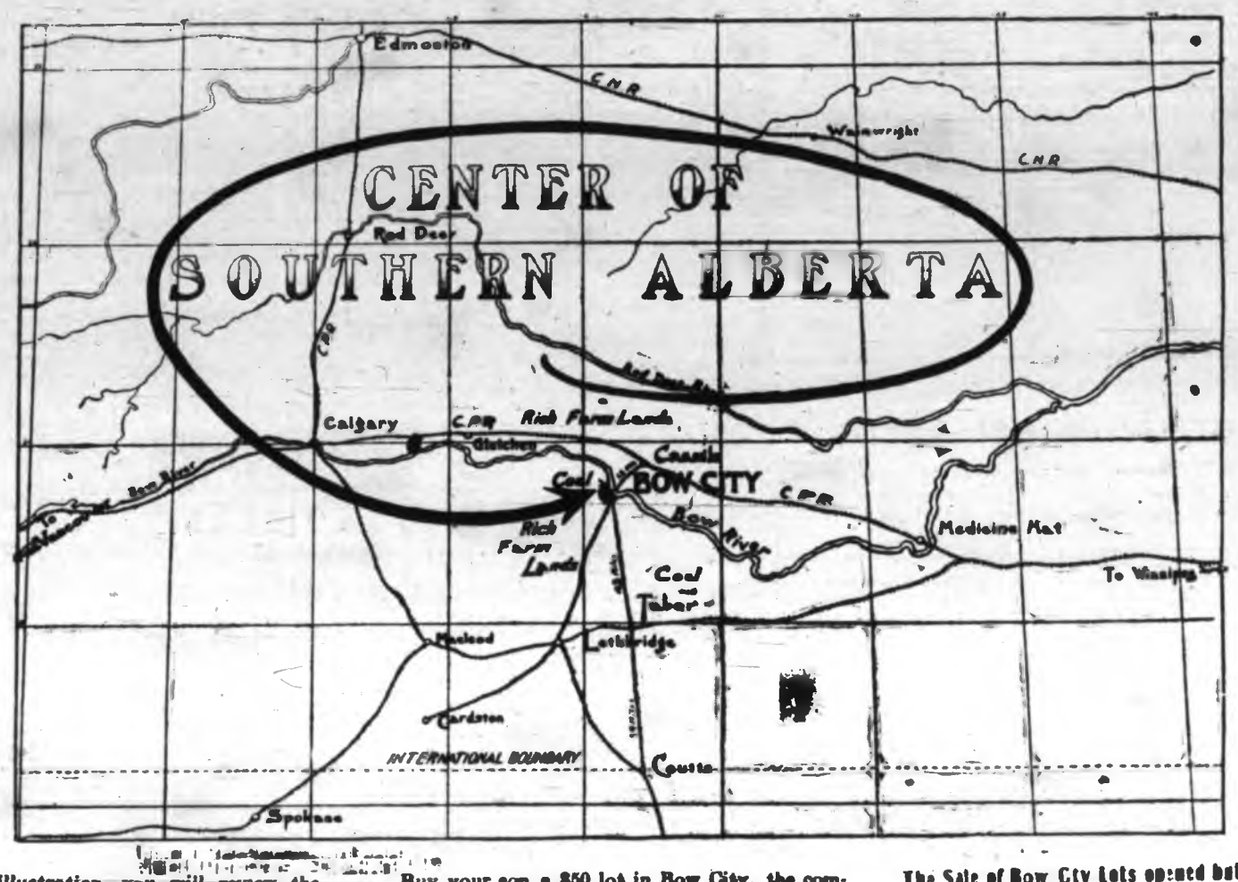
Don't put it in the bottom of the refrigerator.

Keep the cow's tail still by banishing flies. A simple spray will do it.

Strain all milk thoroughly. Germs cling to the dirt particles and may thus be eliminated.

Sterilize all creams, pails, cans and bottles by boiling.

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"



If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor price.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when "he comes of age that lot will be worth consid-"erable money and will provide a handsome "stake for him in life; it is at least most sub-"stantial life insurance—sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Albert has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid—a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no licenses shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your apulication by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots. On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

THE REAL DEMOCRACY.

In these days of Lloyd George budgets we hear much about the triumphant march of democracy. By the friends and by the enemies of democracy it is regarded as something portentous. More than a century ago Alexander Hamilton said, "Your democracy, sir, is a great beast." The notion of something wild, terrible, voracious, is always in the minds of those who are opposed to the movement. We do not like the expression "a great beast," but, after all, there are beasts and beasts; and the march of democracy really means that the rights of the ox and the horse are to be asserted against the force and the appetite of the lion and the tiger.

When one reads these alarms about the coming of democracy, and the terrible things the common people will do when they come into their own, and compares them with the actual conditions, he scarcely knows whether the result is farce or pathos. For he finds that for ages the masses of the people have been so humble—humble not like Uriah Heep, but like Tom Pinch—so weak in the assertion of their rights, yet so strong in service and in toil—so dumb, so lacking in the means of effective expression. Even to-day, and in countries where democracy is said to be all-powerful, anyone who really studies types of men will find a ludicrous or pathetic contrast between the pictures of the fierce and arrogant democracy and the demeanor of flesh-and-blood mechanics, laborers, and farmers whom he meets in his daily life. They do look and act and speak so little like tyrants—so much like men who would be amply satisfied with a fair chance and something equal opportunities.

The truth is that democracy simply means self-government—the right of each man to manage his own affairs, to have his fair share of the bounty of Providence, and to pay taxes according to his means. It is quite true that in the progress of democracy one occasionally hears extreme assertions of the power of majorities. But these represent a reaction age nst tyranny worse than that of the majority. It is true that a hundred and one men have no Divine right to rule a hundred; but the system is a protection against the two hundred being ruled by one. Denunciations are hurled against the dem gogue who "sways the multitude." He attracts notice because, perforce, he makes a great deal of noise. But a far greater danger is the man who works in the dark, by intrigue, whispering in the ears of influential people. "Swaying the multitude" is not nearly so dangerous a thing when the multitude knows that it is being swayed as when the thing is done in secret.

The average man means well; human nature on the whole is good, not evil. This is the real safety of democracy. When the minds and the hearts of the people are really applied to the management of public affairs, there is not the least fear that the minority will be oppressed, or that individual energy and genius will be smothered.

TALKING MACHINE

By Stuart B. Stone

Anna Bell Stickney, conceded to be the prettiest girl in her town, was twenty-four and unmarried. This appalling circumstance was due, not to any lack of suitors, but rather to the undeveloped conversational powers of Jack Hatfield.

For the belle of Lincolnville loved a talker.

With matters thus, Anna Belle was introduced, at a function, at the Rodneys', to a little, dapper, nervous man, who acknowledged the introduction with a bow so Chesterfieldian as to scrape the grass.

"I am pleased—charmed—delighted—I may say inexpressibly gratified to have the inestimable honor of your acquaintance," sputtered the little man. "Shall we sit here beneath the spreading maples, or shall I conduct you to some sylvan bower, where we can discuss the fads, foibles and fancies of those about us?"

The little man paused to draw a deep breath. Jack, who had been listening, groaned aloud. Anna Belle gazed at the little man with awed delight.

"If I might presume to conduct you to the bower to which I have just spoken, there to unburden my heart and mind of the thousand and one things which the charm of your presence brings into being—" continued the little man. And Anna Belle allowed herself to be conducted.

Then for two hours Hatfield sat disconsolately beneath the spreading maple and marveled at the unceasing, one-sided babble which came from the sylvan bower, rising and falling, droning and buzzing, humming, lulling but never ceasing. Hatfield timed what he judged to be the little man's sentences, and made solemn oath at the grocery next night that they averaged three and seven-eighths minutes. Anna Belle, conquered in a night, managed one complete sentence at the close of the evening, eliciting the information that the little man's name was Warburton Sands, and that he was the new barber.

After that it seemed to be the cold shoulder for Jack Hatfield, and the extended hand for Sands, the barber. Anna Belle had been simply swept off her feet by the torrent of words. She grew quiet, reserved, almost taciturn. When Mr. Sands called, she would simply suggest "weather," or "music," and the tonsorial artist would begin while the belle leaned her pretty head back and listened.

Things were on until the matter seemed to have resolved into merely a question of the date of the marriage. Hatfield had ceased all effort, though he was seriously considering taking a mail-order course in loquacity. Sands, the barber, was at Anna Belle's arm night and day.

Then at the Jonathan Rodneys again he brought the matter to a head. Hatfield saw him lead Anna Belle into the bower once more. Jack very disconsolate, gravitated near. From the bower a terrific babble came to his ears:

"I love—I vow it is for this forever and eternally by the stars above us—hand in hand together down the paths—"

Drawn irresistibly, Hatfield peeped into the bower. Anna Belle cowered in a corner, shrinking from; dodging the Niagara of word which came unceasingly from the barber:

"Till death do us part—upon my heart I say it—till the end of time—never again to say good-bye—"

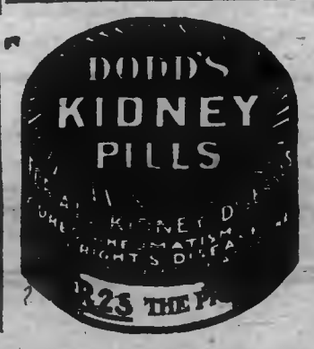
At sight of Hatfield, Anna Belle gave a little scream and flung herself at the astounded had-been. "Oh, Jack," she cried, "if you still care for me take me away. You're such a good listener, Jack, and I want to do the talking."

Jack, who was wiser that he appeared, merely grunted and led her away. And from the bower came after them the voice of Warburton Sands, the barber:

"I pledge my undying fealty—ever and ever—until the sun grows cold—and then some."

Mrs. Hattie Jenkins Colored Lady, Dead—Had Twenty-Five Youngsters.

Lancaster, Pa., Jan. 5.—Mrs. Hattie Jenkins, a colored woman, born in 1793, is dead in this city. She was married three times, was the mother of twenty-five children, and outlived her husbands, and with one exception, all of her children. The sole survivor is a son residing in this city.



THE SIMPLE LIFE

There was no one at the station, but we did not expect to be met. A shabby jingle, with a shaggy pony, stood outside, and a depressed man, with a scanty red beard, held the reins. When he spoke it was a shock, his voice was so high and squeaky. "Be you the ladies for Lesrokkers?" said he, and to my surprise Mabel answered "Yes" with a brief aside to me, "Les Rochers—you know that is the name of the house." We got in the jingle.

The pony jogged on between hedges which were a dream of beauty and a tangle of wild roses and honeysuckle. When our driver spoke I gave a jump—his voice was really surprising. "What time to-morrow will you want the jingle to take 'ee to the station?" he piped, and Mabel replied, "Oh, we're not going back to-morrow, we mean to stay several days." "Aw," said he, and spoke no more for a space. Then again he broke the silence. "The last lady what stayed here was mortal fond of my missuses' pastles." "I beg your pardon?" said Mabel, and we glanced at each other. Evidently a mild lunatic, but he seemed harmless.

"Indeed" said Mabel politely, and I smiled—we didn't know what he meant, but we thought it best to humor him. On jogged the pony, and we turned a corner. "That's the gate," said our driver, and we stopped. A gravel slope led down to the white gate, and descending it was the most extraordinary figure I ever saw. "Great Scotland Yard!" I heard Mabel say—in moments of excitement she is slangy. A fat middle-aged man, with thick, greasy hair, parted in the middle and touching his shoulders, clad in something like a dressing-gown, with bath towels slung over it, came to meet us. He spoke in a voice with a strong accent, "Welcome, dear friends, at the house my wife awaits you." We hesitated—would it be correct to shake hands? However, he seized mine in both his, very fat and podgy they were, and drew me inside the gate. But where was Mabel? I looked around and saw her in deep converse with the driver, and she came on after a moment, flushed and breathless. "How do you do, Mr. a—m?" she said briskly, shaking his hand, "and how's Gertrude? I just stopped a moment to look for my pocket handkerchief."

Gertrude met us in the hall. She, too, was clad in the dressing-gown and towel style, and had her hair coiled out in a point at the back. She has got so stout, "fallen abroad," as the folks here say, but she was glad to see us, and kissed us with real kindness. Her little boy—poor little wretch, had a skimpy tunic on his thin body and sandals on his poor little feet, but seemed a dear mite, although he did look like a skinned rabbit. "Our evening meal is spread," said the master of the house, "will you with us of the fruits of the earth partake?" It was unreasonable for me to be angry with the man for talking like that, but I felt cross, and wished he'd just say, "Let us all go in to supper," or whatever he called it.

I can see that meal now if I close my eyes. There were two dishes full of nuts—nuts, walnuts and Brasil nuts, all shelled and heaped up together. There was a dish of gooseberries, and another of plums, both very green and colicky in appearance. Some awful preparation of rye bread, which looked like leather, and tasted like sawdust, was placed in the centre, and there was nothing else, not even butter. Well, no one will believe me if I say that Mabel and I sat down to this repast, and actually managed to swallow some nuts and a portion of that awful bread. There was a fearsome concoction in a bottle, which the master said was unfermented wine, but we absolutely couldn't get that down, and had to ask for water.

Afterwards we sat out in the garden; it was pretty but chilly, and I wanted a warm shawl. Gertrude's husband read aloud—Browning, whom I never could understand, and I was so cold and hungry I shouldn't have enjoyed anything. "We go to rest early," said the gentleman (his name is Greek, and is yards long), "and with the dawn we again arise. Sleep well, my friends! My wife will to your sleeping chambers lead you."

I could have cried, when I was left alone, and sat down on the side of my bed entirely wretched. All the windows were fixed to remain open, and there was a draught through the room enough to turn a mill. Then the bed clothes were "hygienic," nasty prickly khaki color stuff, which I knew would keep me awake. A tap on my door, and Mabel entered. "You poor thing!" said she, "you do look miserable. I'll shut the window, I found out how to do mine." This accomplished, she produced a small bag. "You remember, when we came back from Brest?" she asked. "Well, I found that flask of brandy and water we took and the biscuits in this bag, and I thought you'd be glad of something, if those awful nuts are making you feel as uncomfortable as I am."

It was like an angelic visitor! I nibbled the biscuits and sipped the beverage, and felt after all life was worth living. Mabel joined in the feast, remarking, "No wonder the poor lady who was here last liked the pastles and hogs puddings! I could do with some myself at this very moment." She stayed until I was comfortably tucked up, and then launched her parting shot. "You remember I went back to speak to the driver? Well, I asked him to bring the jingle early to-morrow for us. I knew, directly I saw that awful being coming down the path, that we shouldn't be able to stick it here any longer." As a rule, I reprove Mabel for her slang, but I could say nothing severe to her then. And when I think of the inventions she reeled off glibly next morning, to account for our leaving so soon, I blush even when alone—especially as I backed her up. Our chariot-er arrived early, and as we had half an hour to wait at the station, we visited his "missus," and tasted her "hog's puddens," washed down by a cup of tea. So we did not feel so dreadfully empty when we finally boarded the train. And for once I agree with Mabel when she announces in her own picturesque way that, for her, the "simple life" is "off."

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

BEING NEIGHBOURLY

"Good morning. I am your new neighbor across the way. We moved in yesterday, so, as I believe in being neighborly, I ran over to get a little acquainted.

"I like your parlor curtains, and I think it is a great deal pleasanter to be able at least to bow to one's neighbors, don't you? Some people wait to else them up, but I think one is likely to lose a great deal of pleasure by waiting. There was a woman in the street we've just left who wouldn't--positively wouldn't--make friends. I didn't know her any better when I left than I did the very first minute she came. It looked awfully bad, didn't it? People who are so cautious always have something they want to hide.

"The street I left was much more attractive than this. I don't think this has at all a stylish appearance, do you?

"Well, of course, if you like that style. It's all a matter of taste and what you've been used to. Now, where we were there was a certain air of wealth that was very agreeable. You'd never think of the tenants of this street having any means at all. They wouldn't be here if they had. I certainly should not have come had I realized it. There was electric light where we were. I expect to feel homesick in this place.

"What sort of people had the house we are in now I can't imagine. Oh, yes, everything was clean enough, but it has such a stuffy odor. I suppose the woman never cleaned through in her life. I have never failed to clean through twice a year, except, of course, when we move. That is the great advantage of moving, my husband says, but the next time I move I am going into a new house, and then I won't feel that I am moving in on top of all sorts of wiggly germs. I suppose that woman's children had scarlet fever and other dreadful things? She had no children? Are you certain? Oh, your mother lived there! How convenient for you to leave the baby when you went out!

"We had an awful time moving! Yes, indeed, the men never came until nearly eleven o'clock and they lost one of my chairs off the van. They say I had only five chairs like that and they won't give me a penny for it, but I know I never would have bought five of anything. Would you? My husband is so kindhearted that he won't insist. He declares that ought to know how many I have of anything, but I haven't any head for figures. I get dreadfully mixed up, even when I go shopping.

"Once I went with Mrs. Simmons—you know her husband is the big motor-car man. She was at the opening of the new hospital and her gown was in the papers, though it wasn't anything remarkale. I have the clipping at home somewhere. Well, we went, and I bought braid and a pair of slippers and she paid for them because I had no account there and we couldn't wait for change out of my large cheque. Then I bought tickets for the matinee for both of us and she paid for the luncheon. I tipped the waitress and then Mrs. Simmons found she had no money left. I lent her some for violets and chocolate. Then she found sixpence in the corner of her purse and gave me that. After the matinee we had coffee and she had it charged to her account. Of course we had no care fare, as we were using her motor, but do you know that woman had the effrontery to say I owed her ten shillings. I couldn't figure it out, so I never paid her, and she never came near me again.

"I think it is so foolish to let money differences come between friends, don't you? I never liked touchy people, anyhow.

"Speaking of peculiar people, I noticed that person in the third house, the one in black. Is that her husband who came in with her or her father? Oh, you don't know. She seems very dreary for one in mourning. She went out three times yesterday after five o'clock.

"I think there are two teachers living at the corner. I noticed they went out at half-past eight this morning, and spoke to several children on the street. That boy from the next house walked along with them for quite a distance. I hope he is an unobjectionable child.

"I am quite upset to-day. I had a telegram from my husband's aunt saying she is coming this afternoon for a few hours, and I know she will want tea. I ran in to see if you could lend me a silver cream and sugar. Oh, you haven't?

"No, thank you, I don't care for cut glass ones. They haven't the style of silver. I suppose I shall have to unpack mine. It is such a nuisance!

"Oh, is that your cake burning? I smelled it some time ago and thought of course you had a maid. Oh, certainly, I'll come in again. Good-bye."

SOME ODD SIGNS

A couple of odd signs may be seen in the little village of Grasmere, in the English Lake region, the home of Wordsworth and De Quincey and Coleridge. Over the shop of the village stationer and bookseller is painted the suggestive and inviting name, "C. Read" (See, Read), while the name of the butcher is the equally apropos "I. Chew." It is not often that places for the sale of liquor have such names as those given to two public houses in Lancashire. One of these is called "A Load of Mischief," the other bears the name, "One Too Many."

RISKED LIFE TO SAVE A PIGEON

An exciting incident recently occurred at Brighton in the presence of a large crowd. A pigeon, the property of the West Pier Company, fell into the water. An employe of the company immediately put off in a boat hanging from the pier, but all his efforts to save the bird proved futile. The pigeon was now underneath the pier owing to the strong current, when a gentleman named Jewel pluckily climbed along the piles, perilously close to the water, and after strenuous efforts was successful in rescuing the bird by the aid of a landing-net. After being placed near a warm stove for a time the pigeon recovered.

John W. Sickelsmith, Greensboro, Pa., has three children, and like most children they frequently take cold. "We have tried several kinds of cough medicine," he says, "but have never found any yet that did them as much good as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy." For sale by all dealers.

A Successful Banquet.

Last night Messrs. G. Walter Green Co., Limited, entertained their employees to the number of about 50 to a banquet in Hooper's Grill Room. The chair was occupied by the popular president of the company, Mr. G. Walter Green, while Mr. T. O. Donaldson, the secretary-treasurer, ably filled the vice-chair. After the good things provided had been disposed of, and after the patriotic toasts had been proposed, speeches were in order. The chairman referred to the pleasant relationship which had always existed between the employees and the members of the company, and paid a well merited tribute to the former. Mr. Donaldson also referred to the satisfactory and pleasant conditions which existed, and the harmonious feeling that prevailed between the employers and the employees. After the very pleasant evening, during which speeches were made by many of those present, the party separated.

n Interesting Case Before County Court

esterday morning. His Honor, ge Huycke, held court in the nty Court room, when Mr. John on, the local barrister, claimed ry damages from Messrs. Longo Co., the Hunter street fruit dealMr. D. O'Connell acted for Mr. n, and Mr. F. D. Kerr, for the ndants. The first witness Mr. Longo noted that Mr. Green had upied apartments above the store the past three years and more. , Longo's cousins lived over een's apartments. In regard to the rge that Mr. Green had sustained s by water leaking to his artments from the rooms above, troying he claimed, carpets, wallper, a sewing machine, books and ng physical damage to his person constitution. Mr. Longo said, he itted some water had leaked ough. This he claimed came from roof. Some months ago he repapered and whitewashed Mr. Green's apartments. He claimed that Mr. Green had paid rent only to August last last.

P. C. Adams, next witness, stated that Mr. Green had got him to go to his rooms in the middle of the night some months ago. Water was coming through the ceiling. Witness got the Longos, and the water turned off in the cellar. He said Mr. Green exclaimed, "My God, aint it awfull" when the water was shown him. Witness found a tap, in Longo's room above Mr. Green's apartments running into a stationery basin, and thence to the floor.

Mr. Green in the box, said he had occupied his rooms since 1904, and had had no trouble until Longo come into the building.

As a counter claim for alleged unpaid rent was presented, the case was adjourned until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Looks Like a Very Heavy Session of Parliament

ARMERS' BANK SMASH TO BE THRASHED OUT—CHANGES IN THE BANK BILL.

eciprocity a Feature—A Big Scandal Program—Reform of Senate May be Taken up.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—Parliament re-assembled this afternoon at two o'clock after the Christmas recess with a fair attendance of members for the first day's sitting. It is private members' day and the sitting will be short, as on Wednesdays, the House only sits until six o'clock.

There are some 28 questions on the paper, none, however, of startling interest, and unless the Opposition leaders should spring some important points on the orders of the day the sitting is likely to be uneventful.

But this condition of things will not last very long. There are big subjects to be discussed within the next four months, and the Opposition are ready and eager for the fray. The failure of the Farmers' Bank will add interest to the discussion of the Bank Act, as there will be determined efforts made to secure some 'system of Government inspection, there being a wide-spread opinion that the proposed shareholders' audit, which is incorporated in the bill, is insufficient to protect the interests of the shareholders.

DEBATE ON RECIPROCITY.

The Washington negotiations will, of course, lead to a long debate, but this will be staved off until the return of Messrs. Fielding and Paterson next week.

This will naturally bring up the demands of the Western farmers and the counter representations of the manufacturers, who are coming to Ottawa in force on Friday to interview the Premier and his colleagues.

THE SCANDAL PROGRAM.

The "scandal" feature of the session promises to be sensational and interesting. Already the Conservatives have enough material on hand to keep the Public Accounts Committee busy for many weeks. Chief among their ammunition will, of course, be the printing bureau report, because it is well understood that they will endeavor to make of that their piece de resistance, although there will be the usual attention given to dredging and other operations of the Public Works Department.

SEVENTEEN DROWN.

Three Barges Broke Loose From Tug And Were Dashed to Pieces.

Provincetown, Mass., Jan. 10.—Seventeen men were drowned in a wreck of three barges of the Reading Railway tug Lykens to-day, according to officers of the three life-saving crews that made a heroic fight to save them.

They declare that there were seven men on one barge and five on each of the other two.

The life-savers state that all seventeen men of the three crews undoubtedly have perished. About 10 o'clock this morning the last two were drowned. They had lashed themselves to the rigging of the third barge, and the only one that was still above water in the raging sea, but seeing that the life-savers were unable to get a line to them, or to launch a boat, they took to their own dory, evidently preferring to face almost certain death in the heavy seas, than to be bathed constantly in the icy water. Almost instantly the little craft capsized, and was smashed to bits. Nothing further of the two remaining men was seen. The life-savers declared there were no more men on the barge.

The tug Lykens, of the Reading Railway fleet, with the barges Treverton, Corbin and Pine Hill, coal laden from Philadelphia, in tow, was en route up the coast to-day when the towing hawser parted, and the barges went adrift. The Treverton and Corbin labored a short time in the heavy sea, and then sank. The Pine Hills was swept by the tide on the bar near Peaked Hill, and hung there. Life-savers from High Head, Peaked Hill, and Race Point tried for hours to launch their surf boats, but the waves each time drove them back.

Bill of Complaint Fyled at Toronto

Protestant Ratepayers of S. S. No. 8, Otonabee, Enter Protest

An appointment has been made with the Inspector of County Public Schools, as provided by the Statute, for Saturday, Jan. 14th at 2 p.m., by the Protestant ratepayers of P.S.S. No. 8, Otonabee, for the hearing of complaints against the system of School by ratepayers in that Section.

The object of the ratepayers of Public S. S. No. 8, Otonabee is:

(1) By petition to the Legislation to show the desirability of having the teaching of religion wholly done away with in mixed (Public) Rural Schools. This petition has been despatched, signed by all the resident Protestant ratepayers of the section and supported by affidavits, to the Lieut.-Governor of the Province.

(2) To call the inspector's attention to the wholly unsatisfactory manner of conducting the elections for trustees in the said Section.

At the meeting of ratepayers held for that purpose a poll not being held it is proposed to show that it was possible for those in attendance to vote whether rate payers or not and to hold up two hands instead of one—in a word there was no guarantee that the ratepayers were allowed to manage their own affairs and it is believed and asserted that the election was irregular as a consequence. Those in attendance should not be allowed to vote unless on the list.

(3) That no record was kept of those who voted and no proper count made.

(4) That the Board of trustees was not called together during the year.

(5) That the complainants are willing that the same trustees (two R.C. and one Protestant with an R.C. Secretary) should be re-elected and they propose to move to that effect if a new election is granted, but they are desirous of replacing the "system" or lack of system by the usual proper method of doing business elsewhere.

(6) That no agreement has been signed by the Board with the teacher as required by the Act.

(7) That the minutes of annual ratepayers' meeting (if any) were not signed by Secretary as required.

(8) That the Inspector's report to the Board on condition of School was never made known or read to Board or ratepayers as required.

(9) There is no personal ill-feeling on the part of the complainants whatever towards the other ratepayers but the loose way of conducting the ratepayers' School business is eminently prejudicial and unsatisfactory and in conjunction with the opportunity afforded by the Act for the teaching of religious dogmas and customs is producing a condition of affairs than can easily be remedied and should not be allowed to continue.

(10) That the teacher, Miss Ward, a Roman Catholic, is considered painstaking and satisfactory.

AMERICAN MEMBERS OF INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION PUT THEMSELVES ON RECORD.

The Government Should Formulate a Plan—Canada Must Develop the Power Alone — A Canadian Triumph.

Washington, January 10.—The persistent attempt of the Long Sault development Company, a Pitt-burg concern, to obtain from the United States and Canadian Governments the use of the waters of the Long Sault Rapids in the St. Lawrence River, near Cornwall, thereby arousing one of the bitterest oppositions ever given to such a scheme from Canada, has at last been brought to defeat.

OPPOSED TO THE SCHEME.

The American members of the International Waterways Commission have put themselves on record through a report just handed to your correspondent by Brigadier-General Ernst, and published herewith for the first time, as opposed to the scheme of the company and advising that the Governments of both nations formulate a plan for the development of the unused water power of the rapids.

CANADA MUST DEVELOP ALONE

The report sets out that the members are convinced the powers should be utilized in the interests of both countries. The United States Government, the document goes on to say, has, however, so many other demands upon it at the present time for the development of other waterways that it could hardly be counted upon to consider favorably their suggestion. Therefore, the Canadian Government would either be obliged to carry it out alone or with the aid of private capital. The members are agreed that the interests involved could only be safeguarded by Government ownership. If done by capital, says the report, it should be under the strictest governmental control, remembering always that the interests of navigation were paramount and the interests of the power purposes incidental and secondary.

DRASTIC AMENDMENTS.

With this in view, the members of the Commission give a series of drastic amendments which, they claim, should be made to the bill introduced to Congress by Mr. Mabley, of Buffalo, on behalf of the Long Sault Development Company. These provisions include a clause to the effect that property in the dams should be ceded on completion to the United States Government with perpetual right to use the water powers when and only when, it would not interfere with navigation. Another provision submitted is that the whole scheme, in so far as it is within United States territory, should be subject to the Secretary of War for military purposes when required.

HE HAD ECZEMA 25 YEARS AND DOCTORS SAID "NO CURE."

Yet Zam-Buk Has Worked Complete Cure.

This is the experience of a man of high reputation, widely known in Montreal, and whose case can readily be investigated. Mr. T. M. Marsh, the gentleman referred to, lives at 101 Delorimier Avenue, Montreal, and has lived there for years. For twenty-five years he had eczema on his hands and wrists. The disease first started in red blotches, which itched, and when scratched became painful. Bad sores followed, which discharged and the discharge spread the disease until his hands were one raw, painful mass of sores. Just think of this state of affairs continuing for twenty-five years!

In that time four eminent medical men tried to cure him, and each gave up the case as hopeless in the end. Naturally, Mr. Marsh tried remedies of all kinds, but he also, at last gave it up. For two years he had to wear gloves day and night so terrible was the pain and itching when the air got to the sores.

Then came Zam-Buk! He tried it, just as he had tried hundreds of remedies before. But he soon found that Zam-Buk was different. Within a few weeks there were distinct signs of benefit, and a little perseverance with this great herbal balm resulted in what he had given up all hope of—a complete cure! And the cure was no temporary cure. It was permanent. He was cured nearly three years ago. Interviewed the other day, Mr. Marsh said: "The cure which Zam-Buk worked has been absolutely permanent. From the day that I was cured to the present moment I have had no trace of eczema, and I feel sure it will never return. Having suffered for twenty-five years, I had naturally concluded that my case was incurable, and I regard my cure as a modern miracle."

If you suffer from any skin trouble, cut out this article, write across it the name of this paper, and mail it, with one cent. stamp to pay return postage, to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. We will forward you by return a free trial box of Zam-Buk. All druggists and stores sell this famous remedy. 50c. box, or three for $1.25. Refuse harmful substitutes.

PROHIBITION IN NEW ZEALAND.

The war against the liquor traffic is taking a new form in the Dominion of New Zealand, and it is expected that the result will be either national or local prohibition, in forms which will lead the way for other sections of the Empire. A licensing bill now before the New Zealand Parliament contains these interesting provisions:

National prohibition is to be submitted as an issue at licensing polls; local no-license and national prohibition are to be carried be 55 per cent. of the votes (this percentage, according to a later message, has been raised to 60 per cent.) ;national prohibition is to come into force four years after its adoption at a poll, and local prohibition one year after adoption: if national prohibition is carried the subsequent votes (every three years) will be on national restoration, the 55 (60) per cent. majority operating and licenses to be restored in three months; during national prohibition liquor is not to be imported, manufactured, or sold in New Zealand; breweries and "depots" within five miles of a no-license district are to be prohibited; there is no provision to prevent any increase in the existing number of licenses; the employment of barmaids is to be prohibited after June next, with certain exceptions; the age under which it is illegal to serve youths is to be extended to 21.

May Save a Half Million from Ontario Bank Wreck

That the shareholders of the defunct Ontario Bank may receive back something over $500,000, after they have paid the double liability call, is the hope held out at present. This is still a possibility only, but it is contended that the double liability calls have been responded to so liberally that a large amount of property, owned by the bank, will not have to be sold until it realizes its full share.

Out of 600 shareholders over 500 have already responded to the calls, and 65 per cent. of the liabilities have been paid.

The remaining 35 per cent. of the liabilities will be paid off without the sale of considerable property and this will be carried along for favorable sale, and the gain revert to the shareholders.

Mrs. Laura Schenk Will Take the Stand

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 11.—Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk will take the stand when her defence to the charge of attempting to poison her millionaire husband, John O. Schenk, begins.

This announcement was made by her attorney to-day. Dr. Francis Lemoyne Hupp, one of the chief witnesses for the State, completely baffled her and her lawyer to-day, his testimony on direct examination being practically unshaken by a grilling fire of cross-examination directed by Mrs. Schenk.

Anticipating the most sensational evidence yet given in the trial of Mrs. Schenk, who is charged with placing poison in the food and medicines of her millionaire husband, the biggest crowd that has so far been brought out attracted the Ohio County Court House to-day, overwhelming for a time the additional guards which had been placed about the building and in the Criminal Court room by direct order of Judge Jordan.

Rochester Puts Ban on Long Hat Pins

Rochester, N.Y., Jan. 11.—An ordinance providing that no woman should wear a hat pin that extends more than half an inch beyond the crown of her hat, passed the City Council last evening. Henceforth the woman with a long hat pin will be subject to arrest and to all the fines and penalties that attach to any other offender against the penal code of the city.

Many Chinamen will Part with Their Queues

San Francisco, Jan. 11.—All the local Chinese newspapers publish what purports to be a message from Wu Ting Fang, late Minister to the United States, announcing the date to be fixed for the removal of the queue. The message reads:

"His Excellency Wu Ting Fang having given the matter deep consideration, has come to the conclusion that the most auspicious time for disposing of superfluous appendages will be the sixteenth day in the first month of the third year of his Imperial Highness, Suen Tung. On that day, therefore, he will order the barber to cut off his queue."

The date fixed is January 30, on the Western calendar. On that day, it is reported, many local merchants will follow his example, and celebrate the parting with their queues at a big banquet.

Some Suspicious Persons

Enquired if we were "hiring" a certain "weekly" paper to abuse us

Of course every time a spot light is turned on from any source it offers a splendid chance to talk about the merits of the products, but 'pon honor now, we are not hiring that "Weekly."

The general reader seldom cares much for the details of "scraps."

A few may have read lately some articles attacking us and may be interested in the following.

Some time ago a disagreement arose with a "Weekly." They endorsed our foods by letter, but wanted to change the form of advertising, to which we objected.

The "Weekly" discontinued inserting our advertisements while they were negotiating for some changes they wanted in the wording and shape of the advertisements, and during this correspondence our manager gave instructions to our Advertising Department to quit advertising altogether in that "Weekly."

Quite a time after the advertising had been left out, an editional attack came. We replied in newspapers and the scrap was on.

Then came libel suits from both sides, and some harsh words.

Generally tiresome to the public.

That "Weekly" has attacked many prominent men and reputable manufacturers.

Our Company seems prominent enough for a sensational writer to go after, hunt for some little spot to criticise, then distort, twist and present it to the public under scare heads.

So an attorney from New York spent more or less time for months in Battle Creek hoping to find impurities in our foods, or dirt in the factories. After tireless spying about he summoned twenty-five of our workmen and took their testimony. Every single one testified that the foods are made of exactly the grain and ingredients printed on the packages; the wheat, barley and corn being the choicest obtainable—all thoroughly cleaned—the water of the purest, and every part of the factories and machinery kept scrupulously clean.

That all proved disappointing to the "Weekly." There are very few factories, hospitals, private—or hotel and restraurant kitchens that could stand the close spying at unexpected times and by an enemy paid to find dirt or impurities of some kind.

In an ordinary kitchen or factory he would find something to magnify and make a noise about.

But he failed utterly with the Postum Works and products. Twenty to thirty thousand people go through the factories annually and we never enquire whether they are there to spy or not. It makes no difference to us.

He next turned to discover something about our advertising that could be criticized.

An analysis of the methods of distorted statements of the "Weekly" may interest some readers, so we take up the items one by one and open them out for inspection. We will "chain up" the harsh words and make no reference in this article to the birth, growth and methods of the "Weekly" but try to confine the discussion to the questions now at issue.

Some Facts.

Battle Creek, Mich., December 30, 1910.

We the undersigned certify that never to our knowledge has a t monial letter been printed by the Postum Cereal Co., Limited, which not have behind it a genuine letter signed, and believed to be an ho statement.

To the best of our knowledge and belief the Company has receive wards of fifty thousand, (50,000) genuine testimonial letters.

This Company has never knowingly made nor printed an untrut statement regarding its products or its methods.

DISTORTION No. 1

states that we have been accustomed to advertise Grape-Nuts and Postum as "cure-alls for everything."

It has never been the policy of this Company to advertise Grape-Nuts or Postum to cure anything.

We say that in cases where coffee disagrees and is causing sickness its dismissal will remove the cause of the trouble, and we suggest the use of Postum for the reason that it furnishes a hot palatable morning beverage, and contains natural elements from the grain which can be used by nature to assist in rebuilding nerve centres that coffee may have broken down.

Likewise Grape-Nuts food does not cure anything, but it does assist nature tremendously in rebuilding, provided the undigestible food that has been used is discontinued and Grape-Nuts taken in its place.

CHARGE No. 2

states that the passage of the National Food & Drugs Act compelled us to drop from the packages some assertions regarding the nutritive value of Grape-Nuts.

We have never been "compelled" to make any change.

Since the beginning it has been a universal rule to print clearly on every package exactly what the contents are made of.

Before the passage of the Pure Food Law the packages stated that Grape-Nuts food was made of wheat and barley.

We did not esteem the small amount of salt and yeast as of value enough to speak of, but after the new Law came in we became as technical as the officials at Washington and added the words "yeast" and "salt" although we have no recollection of being asked to.

We believe that our statement that Grape-Nuts will supply elements to nourish the brain and nerve centres is true and bring authorities to support the fact.

Some state chemists believe this a gross exaggeration and inasmuch as the Food Dept. at Washington could easily harass grocers, pending a trial on the disputed question, we concluded that much the better way would be to eliminate from our packages such claims, however certain we may be that the claims are true.

Another statement objected to read as follows:

"The system will absorb a greater amount of nourishment from one pound of Grape-Nuts than from ten pounds of meat, wheat, oats, or bread."

Some Department chemists deceive themselves as well as the public.

"Calorie" is the word which defines a unit of heat determined by the amount necessary to raise one kilogram of water one degree centigrade. On this basis a table of calories is prepared showing the percentage of different kinds of food. Butter shows 8.89, Grape-Nuts 3.86 milk 0.70. Remember the statement on the package spoke of the nourishment the system would absorb, but did not speak of the calories of heat contained in it, for the heat is not nourishment and the nourishment cannot be judged by the number of heat unites, notwithstanding the fact that certain chemists would have the public believe so.

As an illustration: Attempt to feed a man sixty days on butter alone, with its 8.60 calories. The man would die before the experiment had run sixty days.

Then, take Grape-Nuts with 3.86 and milk with 0.70,—the two combined equal 4.66.—about one-half the number of calories contained in butter. The man fed for sixty days on this food would be well nourished, and could live not only sixty days, but six months on that food alone, and we do not hesitate to say from our long knowledge of the sustaining power of the food that a man at the end of sixty days would be of practically the same weight as when he started.—if he be a man of normal weight.

We will suppose that from his work he lost a pound a day and made up a pound each day from food. If that promise proved to be true, the man in sixty days' time would make sixty pounds of tissue to replace what had been lost, and this would be done on Grape-Nuts and milk, with half the number of calories of butter, upon which no one can sustain life.

Therefore, we have reason to believe that our contention is right that concentrated food like Grape-Nuts which is partly digested and ready for easy assimilation by the body, presents more nourishment that the system will absorb than many other forms of food, and we will further say that in cases of digestive troubles where meat, white bread and oats cannot be digested, that Grape-Nuts and milk contain more nourishment that the system will absorb than many pounds of these other foods.

DISTORTION No. 3

charges that our testimonials were practically all paid for and re-written in Battle Creek.

These testimonials were demanded by the opposing lawyers. Naturally this demand was refused, for they are held in vaults and kept safe to prove the truth, and are not to be delivered up on demand of enemies.

Testimony at the trial brought out the fact that we never printed a single testimonial that we did not have the genuine letter back of. Many of these letters came spontaneously. A record was kept of twelve hundred and four (1204) letters received in one month from people who wrote that they had either entirely recovered their health or been benefited by following our suggestions on food and beverages.

On three or four occassions in the past ten or twelve years we printed broadcast in papers offers of prizes to users of Postum and Grape-Nuts, —two hundred $1.00 prizes, one hundred $2.00, twenty of $5.00 and five of $10.00 each,—stating that each must an honest letter with name and address. We agreed not to publish names, but to furnish them to enquirers by letter. These letter writers very generally answered those who wrote to them, and verified the truth of the statements.

Under this agreement not to publish names literally scores of letters came from doctors. We kept our word and neither printed their names or surrendered the letters.

Right here notice an "imitation spasm." The "Weekly" says: "Post got these testimonials by advertising for them. In New York he sued for that purpose the New York Magazine of——whose editor is now in the Federal Penitentiary for fraudulent use of the mails. For example, Post announced in that magazine in 1907, etc." (then follows our prize competition).

We used nearly all the papers and magazines in New York and the rest of America, but the sensational writer gives the impression to his readers that the only magazine we used was one "whose editor is now in the Federal Penitentiary," etc., something that we know nothing of the truth of now, and never did. Space was bought in the magazine spoken of on a business basis for the reason that it went to a good class of readers. The incident seems to have furnished an opportunity for a designing writer to deceive his readers.

We look upon honest human testimony from men and women as to the means by which they recovered health as of tremendous value to those in search of it. Our business has been conducted from the very first day upon lines of strict integrity and we never yet have published a false testimonial of human experience. Many of these letters covered numerous sheets; some, if printed, would spread over half a page of newspaper. If we would attempt to print one such letter in every one of the thousands of papers and magazines we use, the cost for printing that one letter would run into many thousands of dollars.

We boil down these letters exactly as a newspaper writer boils his news,—sticking sacredly to the important facts and eliminating details about the family and other unimportant matters. This work of boiling down, or editing, is done honestly, and with a full knowledge of our responsibility but notice the art of the "twister" in the way he presents to his readers this matter of testimonials.

DISTORTION No. 4.

This is a bad one. It reads as follows: "The only famous physician whose name was signed to a testimonial was produced in court by Colliers and turned out to be a poor old broken down homeopath, who is now working in a printing establishment. He receives ten dollars ($10.00) for writing his testimonial."

We will wager ten thousand dollars (10,000.00) with any investigator we have, subject to inspection of any fair committee, upwards of three hundred (300) communications from physicians, many of them expressing the hightest commendation of our products, but these will not now or ever be turned over to the publisher for his use.

Notice the statement in this charge: "The only famous physician whose name was signed to Postum testimonials, etc."

The truth is, this Dr. Underwood was one of a great many physicians who have not only written commendatory words about the value of our foods, but every now and then some physician writes an article on coffee or on foods, and sends it to us with a suggestion of compensation for his time and medical knowledge. Previous to the time when we employed physicians in our own business, we occasionally employed a doctor a doctor to write an article on coffee, always insisting that the article be an honest expression of his opinion and research.

The "Weekly" hunted up this physician, and because he seemed to be poor, and as it says, "brokendown," had him brought to Court to be exposed before a jury as the "only physician that had ever endorsed Grape-Nuts," but much to the chagrin of the "Weekly," when our attorneys asked him if the article he wrote about coffee was true, he replied, "yes."

STATEMENT No. 5.

reads: "The health officers of Mich., Maine, Penn., New Hamp., and other states in their official bulletins have for years been denouncing as preposterous and fraudulent the claims made by the Postum Cereal Company." We do not recall any criticism except from Mich., Penn., Maine and S. Dakota.

The average reader might think that the opinions expressed by the State Officials are always correct, but that conclusion is not borne out by facts.

As an illustration: About thirteen years ago the Dairy and Food Commission of Michigan for some personal reason printed a severe criticism on us for making Postum of Barley (according to his official chemist) at market price and selling too high. He was shown there was never a grain of barley used in Postum. His report was false and misleading. The governor dismissed him.

We believe that most of the state officials are honest, and on the other hand we are firmly convinced that some of their conclusions cannot be substantiated by facts in scientific research.

They never criticize the purity of our foods, for so much we are thankful.

If our conclusions in regard to its being a brain food differ from their's, and we are both honest, they have rather the advantage, because under the law they can order us to eliminate from the package any statement if it disagrees with their opinion. Otherwise they would harass grocers.

SPASM No. 6 Says:

"The most dangerous thing in the world for one threatened with appendicitis is to eat any food whatever. Notwithstanding he knew that danger, C. W. Post advertised Grape-Nuts at fifteen cents a package for those so threatened."

This is intended to muddle the reader into believing that we put out Grape-Nuts as a cure for appendicitis.

Mr. Post, himself, has had probably as wide experience as any other man in America in the study and observation of food as related to the digestive organs, and we proved in Court by the physicians and surgeons on the witness stand that the predominating cause of appendicitis is undigested food, and that it is necessary to quit eating food, and when the body requires food again, use a pre-digested food, or at least one easy of digestion.

Dr. Ochsner in his work on appendicitis refers directly to the use of the well-known pre-digested foods that can be obtained on the market. He also brought out the interesting fact that in "after treatment" it is advantageous to take on a pre-digested food.

The price of the package (referred to by the weekly) is not known by us to have any relation to the question.

Our advice to stop using indigestible food in bowel troubles and to use Grape-Nuts food has been a great blessing to tens of thousands of people, and we hope will continue to bless a good many more in the succeeding years.

is a live wire. It refers to C. W. Post and his studies and experience in "Suggestive Therapeutics," or "Mental Healing" which further lead to a most careful and systematic study of the effect of the mind on the digestive and other organs of the body.

He attended clinics in Europe and fitted himself for a future career in which he has become known as one of the food experts of the world, fitted to judge both from the material as well as the mental side of the question.

For about eight years previous to 1891 he was an invalid. In that year, after being under the care of several well-known physicians he was quickly healed, by what to him was a curious and not well-understood method. Sufficient to say he became a well man, weighing about 185 pounds.

This experience challenged his investigation into causes of disease and their amelioration. Those studies and experiences developed a very profound reverence for a Supreme Power which directly operates upon the human being, and this reverence for the Infinite became to him a form of religion which included honesty of purpose towards his fellow-man. A statement which will be indorsed by everyone who knows him closely.

He will make a public announcement in detail of these facts, and the Postum Company will cause that statement to be published in newspapers and magazines in due time. We suggest the reader look for it.

PREVARICATION No. 8.

"Post spends nearly a million a year in advertising and relies on that to keep out of the newspapers the dangerous nature of the fraud he is perpetrating on the public."

The Postum Company does pay out upwards of a million a year for trade announcements. Newspaper men believe our statements truthful or they would not print them. Large numbers of newspaper men use our products.

They are capable of telling the public whether or not we "bribe" them.

It may have escaped notice that we did not "bribe" that particular weekly.

No. 9

states that the amount of the verdict will "be devoted by the "weekly" to exposing fraud."

This is almost real humor.

We have two suits pending against the "weekly" total, $500,000.00.

We haven't "devoted" the sum to any particular purpose yet.

ITEM No. 10

is a "discovery" that wheat bran is a part of Postum.

But the criticism neglected to mention that for years every Postum package announced in plain type that the outer covering of wheat (bran), made part of the beverage.

They ignorantly fell into a trap here, not knowing enough of food value to know that "Taka-Diastase" the article used by physicians the world over for "starch indigestion" is made from "wheat bran."

So we use that part of the wheat berry because it contains the element needed to develop the valuable diastase in manufacture. Good Postum is impossible without this part.

These self-appointed critics do make some laughable blunders through ignorance, but—be patient.

ITEM No. 11

is an illustration of the squirming and twisting of the sensational writer delivering distorted matter to his readers.

While on the witness stand Mr. Post testified to his studies in Anatomy, Physiology, Dietetics and Psychology, —all relating to the preparation and digestion of food. Asked to name authorities studied he mentioned six or eight from memory, and commented on some clinical experience covering several years in annual journeys to Europe.

Now notice the distortion. (Copy from the printed criticism.)

"He (Post) pointed out a pile of books in possession of his attorneys as the very ones he had read."

(Notice.—"the very ones he had read," leading the reader to believe that they were the only ones.)

"Did you consult the books from these editions?" was asked.

"From those and various editions," answered Post.

The attorney "picked up book after book from the pile and showed the title pages to the jury,—all except two had been published since 1905."

This is an example of distortion and false coloring to produce an unfavorable impression.

The facts are Mr. Post purposely introduced the latest editions that could be obtained of prominent authorities to prove by them the truth of his statements regarding appendicitis and the analysis of brain, also the latest conclusions in regard to the action of the digestive organs. These works are:

Human Physiology, by Raymond.
Physiological Chemistry, by Simon.
Digestive Glands, by Pawlow.
Hand Book of Appendicitis, by Ochsner.
Physiological Chemistry, by Hammarsten.
Biochemic System of Medicine, by Carey.

The "Weekly" carefully eliminates from its printed account, testimony regarding the years of research and study by Mr. Post in fitting himself for his work, and would lead the reader of the distorted article to believe that his education began 1905.

DISTORTION No. 12

reports Mr. Post as a "dodging ness."

His eye is not of the shifty observed in the head of one of chief critics. On the witness Mr. Post looks quietly but steadily straight into the ey the haggling, twisting lawyer, t all his art to ask double-ta questions and bull-doze and confu witness.

The "dodging" it seems cons of replying, "I don't know."

Opposing counsel holds a boo his hand while he queries,—

"I want to know if there is a s thing in your whole book here suggests any particular kind food." Then followed some di sion between attorneys.

When Mr. Post was allowed t ply, he said, "I don't know unti read the book over to see."

This book, it turns out, was w ten by Mr. Post seventeen years and probably has not been read c fully by him in the last fifteen ye It would require a remarkable m ory to instantly say "yes" or as to what a book of 147 pages or did not contain, without rea it over,—but such conversative well-balanced answers are constr by sensation seekers to be "dodging

The attorney sought by every to impress the jury with the fact t Mr. Post's belief in the power mind in relation to the body bra ed him as unreliable and worse.

The following is quoted from one the questions:—

"The lawyer reading from the boo "The writer of these pages desir to say nothing of himself other th as a simple instrument through wh the Divine Principle chooses to ma fest itself by precept and example. "Skill in mental practice is gain in the same way as skill in any d partment of science—by observatio study, experience and the ability evolve correct conclusions.

"Read carefully thoughtfully more than twenty pages daily. A ter wards seek an easy post on wher you will not be disturbed. Rela every muscle. Close your eyes, an go into the silence where mind i plastic to the breathings of spiri and where God talks to the Son. Th thoughts from Divine Universal Mind come as winged angels and endow you with a healing power. If you go into the silence humble and trusting, you will come out enriched and greatly strengthened in body by contact even for a short time with the Father of all life and all power. You will feel refreshed in every way and food taken will digest readily as the stomach works smoothly when under the influence of a Higher Power."

"I ask you if you did not write that, and if you did not believe it when you wrote it."

For a moment the Court Room was in absolute silence.

Mr. Post slowly leaned forward over the rail, pointing his finger at the Attorney's face to emphasize his reply and with eyes that caused those of the Attorney to drop he said, "Yes, I am proud to say I did."

It may be remembered that we were first attacked and have since defended ourselves by placing facts before that great jury—The Public.

A good "scrap" is more or less comforting now and then, if you know you are right.

In the case lately tried an appeal has ben taken to the higher courts. We have unbounded faith in the ultimate decisions of our American Tribunals.

Our suits against the "weekly" have not yet been tried. They are for libel and $500,000.00 is asked as damages, and may the right man win.

After all the smoke of legal battle blowns away, the facts will stand out clearly and never be forgotton that Postum, Grape Nuts and Post Toasties are perfectly pure, have done good honest service to humanity for years, the testimonies are real and truthful, and the business conducted on the highest plane of commercial integrity.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,626 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayniete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,900 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Nictoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes sifted from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button-holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

Large Collars are Usually the Cause—Colts Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course, the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alcohol tends to toughen the skin.

The injuries to the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, withers, etc. A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abcess." Ill-fitting collars and poor drivers are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an accident occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder becomes injured, do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abcess has formed, or the animal is "sweened," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of school work to do that, but it is a good oportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, an application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pasturage for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and, further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice: Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the breed sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

RAISE MORE HORSES

George B. Hulme Says There is Money in This Industry

When George B. Hulme, the noted horse judge, was in Winnipeg recently placing the ribbons on choice animals in many of the horse classes, says The Farmers' Advocate, he took advantage of an opportunity at the stock luncheon to tell farmers of the Canadian West that they should go in extensively for raising horses of all kinds, including army remounts. "In Western Canada," he said, "you have the best climate in the world, and an abundance of food and water that the horse wants."

This is just what many others who are in a position to speak with authority have said. Feed can be produced in abundance at low cost; for the most part the water is satisfactory; the climate is such that with reasonable care horse flesh is developed to perfection.

In spite of these facts, it is remarkable how few farmers really try to raise enough horses to increase their annual cash returns. Some will not be bothered with colts around the place; others consider that there is a chance that after they have paid the stallion service fee the foal will die. They have a sort of holy horror of anything that entails more risk than the growing of wheat. But there are men in the prairie provinces who are making money from breeding mares of the proper type—and they are becoming more numerous year by year. They have realized that it should not be necessary to bring thousands of dray and farm horses from the East every year. They have found out that there is profit in a horse at three or four years when he can be exchanged for cash totalling almost as many hundred dollars.

The horse raising industry is worth considering.

WINTERING FARM HORSES

How to Keep Idle Horses Cheaply in the Winter

There are three or four methods of wintering farm horses. Some turn out the idle horse and let them "rustle," some winter them in protected yards and others winter in the stable. Horses that will not be required to work from freeze-up in the fall till seeding begins in spring can be wintered as well outside as in, and more cheaply. If given a protected yard into which a liberal supply of oat straw has been blown, they will come through the winter in as good shape or better than horses that have been closely confined and fed liberally on grain. An idle horse given plenty of good straw, some prairie hay, a few oat sheaves and water can be wintered in the yard at a minimum cost in labor and feed. Nature provides a heavy coat of hair, so the horse does not suffer any from the cold.

CHANCE FOR FRUIT GROWERS

Speaking at a complimentary dinner given by Victorians in London, Dr. Mead said the Victorian Land Settlement Delegation had finished its work in Great Britain—the work of placing information before those desiring freehold homes on liberal terms on 130,000 acres of good agricultural land. The new settlers, he said, who took up general farming and dairying would find customers for everything they grew and prices that would leave them a handsome reward.

Fruit-growers were going out from England, and they would find a country with great horticultural possibilities. There was a large demand for canned vegetables in the East and an unlimited demand for fresh fruit in Europe. In no other country than Australia, said Dr. Mead, could a man with $1,000 to $10,000 capital find a more attractive and healthful home.

VEGETABLES THRIVE HERE

One of the finest cabbages ever seen in Fort William weighs 19 pounds, and is of excellent quality. Mr. Coombs, who grew it, say he has many more almost as large.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Some Good Suggestions to Paste Up for Reference

Combs should not be washed. Clean them by passing a piece of soft rag between the teeth.

Traces of Mud may be removed from black dresses by rubbing the stains with raw potato.

When Making Pastry add the juice of a lemon to the water for mixing. It will make the paste lighter and dispel the flavor of lard.

Milk and Eggs are great fat producers. Drink milk with your meals instead of water, and, if cared for, eggs can be added with advantage.

Coal-Ash is a fine polisher for the bright parts of the range. Dip a wet rag into the fine ash and rub well, and a fine polish will be the result.

After an Umbrella has been in use for a short time put a drop of oil in the centre of the top about once a month. This prevents the ribs from rusting.

It is recommended that a little vinegar be added to the water in which stockings are rinsed after being washed. The stockings should then be dried wrong side out. Colored stockings will not be faded, and black ones will retain their original lustre.

If when Boiling or Baking Meat you find it is smelling somewhat tainted, take a small piece of stick, put the end of it in the fire, and burn it just enough to make it black. If baking, place the burnt end in the dripping-pan. If boiling, place the end in the saucepan. The taint will be found to have disappeared.

Ink Spots may be removed from certain dress materials if moistened with turpentine, which should be allowed to remain on the spots for five minutes or longer (half an hour, if necessary) before the material is rubbed between the hands as in washing. Turpentine should never be used near an open fire or flame.

A Good Plan is to Rub Vaseline into the backs of ebony hair-brushes before washing, so that the soda will not affect the ebony. Then, when dry, a little olive oil, applied with a soft rag and rubbed in with a clean cloth, will give as much polish as is required, as ebony should not be very highly polished at any time.

Soap never should be used in cleaning paint, especially white enamel or any paint with a gloss, as it will remove the gloss, which is the chief charm of the wood. If, in washing woodwork a cupful of the glue used by carpenters is melted and poured into a pail of warm water, it will not only serve as a cleanser, but it will leave a high gloss such as new paint has.

When Linen has been Badly Scorched, try the following method. Boil to a good consistency in half a pint of vinegar two ounces of fuller's earth and the juice of two onions. Spread this mixture over the damaged part and leave it to dry. If the threads are not actually burnt through, the scorched place will appear after washing as white and perfect as the rest of the linen.

STRAINING MILK

The Milk Strainer Does Not Purify the Fluid

Straining milk does not purify it. Milking should be done with such attention given to cleanliness that it would be unnecessary to use the strainer. The utensil is of value chiefly because it removes the visible indications of impurity from milk, not because it really has any purifying effects. Small particles of manure, hairs, pieces of dead cuticle from the cow's udder and body, and dirt from the milker's hands find their way into the milk pail during the first manipulations of the udder, these impurities are churned around in the pail by the force of the streams as the milk is drawn, and by the time the pail is full this filth is all but dissolved, and no strainer yet produced can remove anything but the coarser and more insoluble substances which settle to the bottom of the bucket.

The millions of bacteria carried into the receptacle by these impurities are untouched by the strainer and go on their way rejoicing to carry ill-health and disease, maybe, to all who drink the milk or use the butter made from it. We use the milk strainer because we do not like the looks of small particles of dirt and refuse in the bottoms of the milk can, or perhaps in the drinking cup. It does no harm to remove these, but gives us a sense of relief in thinking that the milk is clean because it looks clean. We seem to have discharged a moral obligation in using the strainer, forgetting that the real harm comes from the dissolved material, the filth that goes into solution and carries its nauseating effect concealed in the pure white fluid.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

A moderate oven is one in which a piece of white paper will become golden brown in 12 minutes.

A convenience and economy for the oil or gasoline stove is a three part cooker which can be used over one burner. The parts are separated so that three articles can be cooked at the same time.

Rinse out the dish cloths frequently and let them bleach on the grass in the sun to keep them sweet. There is nothing like the sun as a purifier. Use it lavishly and your health will be better and the house purer.

To relieve ear ache, irrigate the ear with warm water. Arrange the patient so that the water can run out of the ear into a receptacle or into cloths which will absorb it. Have the water of slightly more than tepid warmth and allow it to run slowly into the ear until relieved. Cover the ear afterwards with warm woollen cloths.

Little chicks require plenty of fresh water in their reach in hot weather. If this is neglected you will be disappointed in the growth and health of your chicks.

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, or should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $6000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neave St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

now was evacuated after the Second Relief, the official gazettes recorded that Lieutenant Frank Malcolm of the 3rd Cavalry had been promoted to a captaincy, supernumerary on the staff, for gallantry on the field on June 30, while a special minute provided that he should attain the rank of major if he reached Allahabad on or before July 4.

From the point on the road to Cawnpore where Malcolm made his chief farewell, he could see the tower of the Residency, gray among the white domes and minarets that lined the south bank of the Goomtee. He had no illusions now as to the course the mutineers would follow. Native rumors had brought the news of the massacre at Cawnpore, though the ghastly tragedy of the Well was yet to come. He knew that this elegant city, resplendent and glorious in the sheen of the setting sun, would soon be a living hell. A fearsome struggle would surge around that tower where the British flag was flying. A few hundreds of Europeans would strive to keep at bay tens of thousands of eager rebels. Would they succeed? Pray Heaven for that while Winifred lived!

And in all human probability their fate rested with him. If he were able to stir the British authorities in the south to almost superhuman efforts, a relieving force might arrive before the end of July. It was a great undertaking he had set himself. Yet he would have attempted it for Winifred's sake alone, and the thought of her anguish, when she should hear that he was gone, gave him a pang that was not solaced by the dearest honor a soldier can attain—promotion on the field.

It was out of the question that he should return to the Residency before he began his self-imposed mission. Already the enemy's cavalry were swooping along both flanks of the routed troops. In a few minutes the only available road, which crossed the Goomtee by a bridge of boats and led through the suburbs by way of the Dilkusha, would be closed. As it was he had to press Nejdi into a fast gallop before he could clear the left wing of the advancing army. Then, easing the pace a little, he swung off into a by-way, and ere long was cantering down the quiet road that led to Rai Bareilly and thence to Allahabad.

At seven o'clock he was ten miles from Lucknow, at eight, nearly twenty. The quick-falling shadows warned him that if he would procure food for Nejdi and himself he must seize the next opportunity that presented itself while a rest of some sort was absolutely necessary if he meant to spare his gallant Arab for the trial of endurance that still lay ahead.

Though he had never before traveled that road he was acquainted with its main features. Thirty miles from his present position was the small town of Rai Bareilly. Fifty miles to the southeast of Partabgarh. Fifty miles due south of Partabgarh lay Allahabad. The scheme roughly outlined in his mind was, in the first place, to buy, borrow, or steal a native pony which would carry him to the outskirts of Rai Bareilly before dawn. Then remounting Nejdi he would either ride rapidly through the town, or make a detour, whichever method seemed preferable after inquiry from such peaceful natives as he met on the road. Four hours beyond Rai Bareilly he would leave the main road, strike due south for the Ganges, and follow the left bank of the river until he was opposite Allahabad. He refused to ask himself what he would do if Allahabad were in the hands of the rebels.

"I shall tackle that difficulty about this hour to-morrow," he communed, with a laugh at his own expense. Just now, when a hundred miles of unknown territory face me, I have enough to contend with. So, steady is the word! good horse! Cæsarem invehis et fortunas ejus!"

Thus far the wayfarers encountered during his journey had treated him civilly. The ryots, peasant proprietors of the soil, drew their rough carts aside and salaamed as he passed. These men knew little or nothing, as yet, of the great events that were taking place on the south and west of the Ganges. A few educated bunnias and zemindars, who doubtless had heard of wild doings in the cities, glanced at him curiously, and would have asked for news if he had not invariably ridden by at a rapid pace.

As it happened, the route he followed was far removed from the track of murder and rapine that marked the early progress of the Mutiny, and the mere sight of a British officer, moving on with such speed and confidence, must have set those worthy folk a wondering. Between Rai Bareilly and the Grand Trunk Road stood the wide barrier of the sacred river, while the town itself must not be confused with Bareilly—situated nearly a hundred miles north of Lucknow—which became notorious as the headquarters of Khan Bahadur Khan, a pensioner of the British Government, and a ruffian second only to Nana Sahib in merciless cruelty.

All unknown to Malcolm, and indeed little recognised as yet in India save by a few district officials, there was a man in Rai Bareilly that night who was destined to test the chivalry of Britain on many a hard-fought field. Ahmed Ullah, famous in history as the Moulvie of Fyzabad, had crossed the young officer's path once already. When Malcolm took his untrained charger for the first wild gallop out of Meerut—the ride that ended ignominiously in the moat of the King's of Delhi hunting lodge—he nearly rode over a Mohammedan priest, as he tore along the Grand Trunk Road some five miles south of the station.

It would have been well for India if Nejdi's hoofs had then and there struck the breath out of that ascetic frame. Of all the firebrands raised by the Mutiny, the Moulvie of Fyzabad was the fiercest and most dangerous. Early in the year he was imprisoned for preaching sedition. Unhappily he was liberated too soon, and, a fanaticism only inflamed the more by punishment, he went to the Punjab and sowed disaffection far and wide by his burning zeal for the spread of Islam. By chance he returned to Fyzabad before the outbreak at Meerut. The feeble loyalty of the native regiments at Lucknow sufficed to keep all the borderland of Nepaul quiet for nearly two months. But the reports brought by his disciples warned the moulvie that the true believer's day of triumph was approaching. Moreover, the Begum of Oudh, one of three women who were worth as many army corps to the mutineers, was waiting for him at Rai Bareilly, a placid eddy in the backwash of the torrents sweeping through Upper India, and Ahmed Ullah had left Fyzabad on the evening of the 29th to keep his tryst.

It was, therefore, a lively brood of scorpions that Malcolm proposed to disturb when he dismounted from a wretched tat he had purchased at his first halt, and fed and watered Nejdi again, just as a glimmer of dawn appeared in the east. According to his calculations he was about a mile from Rai Bareilly. The hour was the quietest and coolest of the hot Indian night. Some pattering drops of rain and the appearance of heavy clouds in the southwest gave premonitions of a fresh outburst of the monsoon. He was glad of it. Rain would freshen himself and his horse. It made the ground soft and would retard his speed once he quitted the high road, but these drawbacks were more than balanced by the absence of the terrific heat of the previous day. He untrapped his cloak and flung it loosely over his shoulders. Then he waited, until the glowing light brought forth the untiring tillers of the fields, and he was able to glean some sort of information as to the position of affairs in the town. If the place were occupied by a prowling gang of rebels he might secure a guide by payment and avoid its narrow streets altogether. At any rate, it would be a foolish thing to dash through blindly and trust to luck. The issues at stake were too important for that sort of imprudent valor. His object was to reach Allahabad that night—not to hew his way through opposing hordes and risk being cut down in the process.

The lowing of cattle and the soft stumbling tread of many unshod feet told him that some one was approaching. A herd of buffaloes loomed out of the half light. Their driver, an old man, was quite willing to talk.

"There are no sahib-log in the town," he said, for Malcolm deemed it advisable to begin by a question on that score. "The collector-sahib had a camp here three weeks ago, but he went away, and that was a misfortune, because the budmashes from Fyzabad came, and honest people were sore pressed."

"From Fyzabad, say'st thou? They must be cleared out. Where are they?"

"You are too late, hunoor. They went to Cawnpore, I have heard. Men talk of much dacoity in that district. Is that true, sahib?"

"Yes, but fear not; it will be suppressed. I am going to Allahabad. Is this the best road?"

"I have never been so far, sahib, but it lies that way."

"Is the bazaar quiet now?"

"I have seen none save our own people these two days, yet it was said in the bazaar last night that a Begum tarried at the rest-house."

"A Begum. What Begum?"

"I know not her name, hunoor, but she is one of the daughters of the King of Oudh."

Malcolm was relieved to hear this. The wild notion had seized him that Princess Roshinara, a stormy petrel of political affairs just then, might have drifted to Rai Bareilly by some evil chance.

"You see this pony?" he said. "Take him. He is yours. I have no further use for him. Are you sure that there are none to dispute my passage through the town?"

The old peasant was so taken aback by the gift that he could scarce speak intelligibly, but he assured the Presence that at such an hour none would interfere with him.

Malcolm decided to risk it. He mounted and rode forward at a sharp trot. Of course he had not been able to adopt any disguise. While doing duty at the Residency he had thrown aside the turban cut from Abdul Huq and he now wore the peaked Shako, with white puggaree, affected by junior staff officers at that period.

ARE STILL GRAPPLING.

McMahon Bros. are still engaged grappling for the unknown man who was drowned in the harbor Friday morning. They are carrying on the work to-day just outside the piers.

There appears to be no doubt that John Fishleigh was the unfortunate one. Nothing has been heard of him since Thursday night and the grip which he left at the Hotel St. Lawrence and promised to call for next day still remains there.—Port Hope Guide.

Gave a Tea.

Mrs. Gliddon gave a tea at the Conservatory of Music Tuesday, in honor of Miss Eleanor Sisson on the eve of her marriage. Among the guests were Miss Sisson's pupils and the staff of the Conservatory of Music. Miss Sisson, who has been connected with the Conservatory since its inception, was always very popular with her pupils and with her associates on the staff. She was presented with a very handsome mahogany cabinet as an express on of their regard toward her.

THE INCREASED LICENSE FEE.

Much Conjecture as to Meaning of Latest Demands of License Department.

The hotel men of the city are doing considerable speculating as to what is at the bottom of the order the Provincial License Department has issued to all license inspectors, to get a statement of the average daily receipts at hotel bars. Of course the information supplied to the inspector and sent to Toronto will be strictly confidential.

The common guess is that the Department intends making some readjustment as to license fees.

At present, hotels, whether large or small, pay the same fee. The hotel men think the Department may be getting the information to guide them as to the advisability of making a schedule of rates to govern license fees.

EXCURSION TO LINDSAY.

Grillers Will Have a Special Train To Lindsay Tuesday.

The Grillers play the return game with Lindsay next Tuesday night and the Peterborough Hockey Club has made arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway for a special train. Since Cobourg beat Lindsay on their own ice, it is now necessary for the Grillers to duplicate the trick, and likely a large crowd will go to Lindsay to see it done. The train will leave Peterborough at 7.15 o'clock, and return immediately after the game.

A LIVELY "WORK-OUT."

Intermediates and Grillers at Practice Last Night.

The intermediates and the Grillers turned out for practice last night. Charlie Ray was out again. Bond had a bandaged thumb, but took part in the practice. Kelly is laid up with a sore knee received in Cobourg Monday, but will likely be ready for the game with Trenton on Friday. The players worked hard, but the ice was sticky and they often skated past the rubber.

She is the Most Careful and Acceptable Bible Class Teacher.

Miss McCalla of the Y.W.C.A., has received the following letter from the principal of Wycliffe College, regarding Miss Blodgett, who comes to this city on January 15th, to conduct a series of Bible class studies.

January 15, 1911.

Miss McCalla, Secretary of the Y.W.C.A., Peterboro,—

My Dear Madam,—I have been requested by Miss Little, secretary of the Domin on Council of the Y.W.C.A., to state to you, that Miss Blodgett who is to visit Peterborough and hold meetings for women, in your city, is personally and most favorably known to me. I met her frequently during the latter part of June and the early days of July last summer, while she was conducting a Bible class for young ladies at Elgin House, Lake Joseph, Muskoka, where I was myself doing similar work during the summer convention of the Y.W.C.A. Miss Blodgett is a most careful and acceptable Bible class teacher, I am sure that all who help forward her work in Peterborough, when they know her personally and see the results of her work, will be glad that such a privilege was afforded them. Miss Blodgett has been a guest at my house, and I can speak most favorably of her and her message, in every way possible.

Trusting that her visit to Peterborough may accomplish much good,

Believe me,

Faithfully yours,

T. N. O'MEARA.

RINGER'S ROMANCE

By J. H. Rosny, Jr.

Old Bigoneau had been the bell ringer of the village as far back as I remember, and by coming in contact with the priest for years he had become familiar with all parts of the church services to such a degree that there was, at times, almost something clerical about his persons.

By profession he was a tailor, and you might see him every day sitting on the table in his shop, which faced the church, always wearing an enormous pair of old-fashioned spectacles. He had a long unkempt beard, which made him look like a dwarf, and he was about the most unsociable person I have ever known. Everyone called him old Bigoneau, not because of his age, for he was not old, but because of his cranky and unpleasant ways and the peculiar habit he had of thinking aloud.

When I had grown to be quite a big boy something strange happened to old Bigoneau.

One night, when he was sound asleep, an automobile stopped outside his house and two strange men woke him up rudely. Bigoneau had no more strength than a child, but he loved his miserable life and begged the men to do him no harm.

"You are welcome to all I possess," he said, "but, as you see, it is not much."

His two visitors wore false beards, big goggles and long linen dusters.

"We don't want your money," one of the burly giants replied. "Get out up quick, dress and come along with us. You know how to sew and say the prayers for the dying, that's enough."

"Why don't you go to the priest?"

"That's none of your business. Hurry up and keep your tongue until we ask you to talk."

Bigoneau dressed and followed the men outside. It was the second time in his life he had seen an automobile. He remembered having told the road to the nearest town one evening to a big chauffeur who had stopped him outside the church. Perhaps this was the same car. They sped away at breakneck speed, but Bigoneau did not realize it, and when they stopped he thought they had only travelled a dozen miles or so.

They were outside a big chateau with massive grey towers and surrounded by a moat. The car rolled across a bridge and through a maze of halls and rooms. Bigoneau was conducted to a large apartment, where he saw a woman lying on a bed while a tall, masked man was standing near her.

"Father," cried the young woman "do forgive me! Take pity on me and yourself!"

"Pity," growled the giant. "Have you shown any pity to me? Have you not dishonored our noble name? All you have to do now is to prepare yourself to die. You have asked that it be not our hands that send you to your death. This man will do the deed, and he will not be responsible for it, for he will be forced to act as we say."

"Come on," said the colossus, turning to Bigoneau. "Read the prayers for the dying to her and ask God to forgive her sins, for which she is now about to atone with her life."

Bigoneau cried as he began to say the prayers. The poor girl repeated the words softly, as the men left the room for a moment.

"Madame," said Bigoneau, "I would gladly give my life to save yours."

"You must obey them," she said.

"What do they want me to do?"

"They want you to kill me."

"Never! I will never commit a crime like that."

"It will be no crime," said the girl. "If you do not kill me, they will."

The colossus and his sons entered and handed the tailor a big bag.

"Sew her up in that," he ordered, "and when you have done that you will push her into the river."

Bigoneau hesitated, but the girl begged: "Obey them please for my sake."

The tailor slowly started to sew up the bag around the unfortunate woman.

"Throw her on your back," ordered the father when he had finished.

Bigoneau had the strength of the children of the people who carry burdens heavier than themselves, and besides the poor girl weighed only very little. With the bag on his back he followed the three men to the river.

"Do not let father be present at my death," the poor girl moaned.

"One must respect the wishes of the dying," said the father, and walked off.

The two brothers exchanged a few words. Then one of them addressed the tailor: "Tie this stone to the bag."

Bigoneau obeyed.

"Throw her into the river now!"

"Never!" said Bigoneau, in despair.

"Then I will do it for you."

"Do not let him do it," cried the girl.

At the sound of her voice Bigoneau got together all his courage and threw the bag into the river, but at the same moment the brothers seized him and threw him out after it, while a voice cried: "The honor of the Nerkadek is well worth the life of a peasant."

Bigoneau was so sad that he felt death to be delivery, and he would not even have tried to save himself by swimming if he had not felt the bag floating next to him. The stone had fallen off. Then he struck out with all his might and some moments later the current carried the two ashore on a rocky point.

* * * * * *

Two weeks later the priest was about to appoint a bell ringer, when Bigoneau appeared accompanied by a young woman of unusual beauty, his bride.

A HUSBAND'S DUTY

A Hull woman seems to be determined to "obey," whatever may be her attitude with regard to loving and cherishing. When charged along with her husband with being disorderly, she pleaded that it was her husband's place to thrash her!

WEDDING BELLS.

A very pretty house wedding occurred about three o'clock yesterday afternoon, at 366 Pearl Avenue, when Miss Annie Sisson and Mr. George Johnston, were quietly married by Rev. H. R. Trumpour.

The contracting parties were unattended. The bride wore a very becoming suit of cream San Toy.

The wedding march of "Lohengrin" was played by Miss Beatrice Stark.

Immediately after the ceremony the guests partook of a dainty wedding luncheon, before leaving on the 4.38 C.P.R. for an extended honeymoon trip. The bride's travelling suit was of navy blue with hat to match.

On their return Mr. and Mrs. Johnston will reside in the vicinity of the city. An elegant mahogany table was presented to the bride by the members of All Saints' Choir, of which she was organist.

CANADIAN AUTOMATIC TRANSPORTATION CO'S PLANT TO LOCATE AT WELLAND

A number from here attended the general stockholders' meeting of the Canadian Automatic Transportation Company, Limited, which was held on Wednesday last at their head office Confederation Life Chambers, Toronto, and were loud in their praise of the careful management and great prospects in store for the company. The company have recently secured a very desirable factory site, consisting of several acres in the progressive town of Welland. The location is an ideal one for their business, situated as it is, almost adjacent property to the large steel plant here which can take care of the rolling out of their rails, posts, etc., and thus save unnecessary transportation charges on this heavy material. It also gives them easy access to seven railroads, besides water transportation for shipping facilities.

Necessary capital has been secured to justify the company to start in active operation, and the Executive Committee was instructed to get out the plans and specifications of their first factory building, which is to be a modern concrete structure.

The American Company, whose plant is in Buffalo, N.Y., have had for several months, roads in active operation which are earning large profits for the stockholdess in that company. They have in their factory and on their grounds in Buffalo nine miles of track all completed and ready for shipment for the Montezuma and several other mining companies in Colorado, to carry their total product to the steam line at Keystone. This line when completed will have an earning power of about $1000 per day.

It will be worth your while to call at the local office of the company, 18 Bank of Commerce Building, and see photos of roads and cars operated by their marvelous system in actual operation working among the mountains of Pennsylvania, and learn how you can secure stock in the Canadian Company before it is all taken up.

Shareholders of Consumers' Tobacco Company Claim They Were Victims of Merger Deal.

The merger of the McAlpine Tobacco Company, effected a few years ago was aired in the courts again yesterday, when O. E. Fleming, K.C., J. A. Straith and Robert Pinchin on behalf of themselves and other shareholders of the Consumers Tobacco Co., commenced suit against E. A. McAlpine and Chas. A. B. Pratt, and the McAlpine Consumers' Tobacco Co., for $152,500.

They allege that at the time of the merger of the McAlpine Tobacco Co., the defendants took possession of certain stocks and manipulated them in such a manner that they came into possession of all the assets and were left without funds to make up the deficit.

McAlpine and Pratt deny that there was any fraud and bring in a number of counter claims. By the mutual consent of the two counsels, Hon Justice Riddell transferred the case to the non-jury court, and it will come up on February 16.

On Trial for Wife Murder.

Jersey City, N.J., Jan. 11.—The case of Richard O'Leary, charged with having murdered his wife at their home n Kearny last August, was called for trial to-day. O'Leary is alleged to have struck his wife on the head with a flatiron during a quarrel. The woman died the next day in a hospital in Newark.

FLAMES SPREAD TO ADJOINING BUILDINGS, INCLUDING ONE OF THE CITY'S LEADING BANKS.

Aid Sent For to Neighboring Towns as the Flames Gained Rapid Headway—Customers and Clerks Among Dead.

Connellsville, Jan. 12.—A terrific gas explosion and a fire which followed destroyed McCrory's five and ten cent store here to-day, and it is believed that from ten to fifteen persons, mostly customers and young girls who were clerking in the store, were killed.

The explosion occurred at 10 o'clock, and the fire which immediately broke out, soon spread to adjoining buildings.

By noan the flames had been got under control with a loss of about $100,000.

Connellsville, Jan. 12.—The local department found it was unable to cope with the flames, for by eleven o'clock the fire had spread into adjoining buildings, and was threatening to wipe out the entire block. Aid was asked from neighboring towns to check the rush of the fire.

The store was located at North Pittsburg street.

An hour and a half after the explosion ehe police declared that the death list might go to thirty. Among the missing were several men employed in the store.

WALLS CRASH DOWN.

The walls which were weakened by the explosion, fell, piling up the debris into a small mountain, and making it doubtful whether any of those burried beneath could be rescued alive.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Why This Hesitation in Appointing a Successor to Earl Grey.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—The controversy going the rounds with regard to the appointment of a new Governor-General is interesting and in some cases ridiculous.

Why should there be so much hesitation about the appointment of the next Governor-General of Canada? So far as this hesitation results in the prolongation of Earl Grey's stay, no one will complain. But why this reluctance to name his successor? Canada is not a difficult country to govern; as the misguided persons who appointed Governar Metcalfe imagined seventy years ago. We have got along very well with Governors appointed by Liberal and Conservative Governments—men who represent the sentiment of the United Kingdom as it veered from one party to the other. Now, why not give us a Governor who represents the sentiment of the United Kingdom of to-day, its humanitarian spirit, its awakened zeal for social reform?

The people of the United Kingdom elected a Liberal Government to power six years ago, and twice since they have approved of the policy and record of that Government. The Government is vested with full authority, and there is no reason why it should not assert its Liberalism in the appointment of a Governor-General of Canada. No one expects that the Governor-General shall take sides in our public questions in Canada. He is one of the links between the people of Canada and the people of the United Kingdom, and for that reason it is well that he should represent the prevailing sentiment of the people of the United Kingdom.

Nurse Swore That Little Robert Schenk Had Been Poisoned

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 11.—It was woman against woman to-day in the sensational trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, charged with placing poison in the food and medicines of her husband, John O. Schenk, the millionaire packer. Unmasking his heaviest batteries, Prosecuting Attorney Handlan called as his first witness "Miss Evans," the woman of mystery in the case, who nursed Mr. Schenk during his illness from poison.

When court opened at 9 o'clock, half an hour earlier than usual, a storm of wind and rain was sweeping the city, and Judge Jordan had the smallest crowd so far in the course of the trial to contend with.

WANTS TRIAL HURRIED.

The request of Judge Jordan that the trial be hurried was pleasing news to the jurors, who were anxious to get to their homes, despite an unusual diversion which is allowed them in their quarters in the court house. The jurors are spending the evening in the fascinating recreation of playing "penny ante," four hundred pennies and three decks of cards being allowed them.

WOMAN OF MYSTERY.

Ever since her name first became public the mystery about Miss Evans has deepened. No one, save the prosecutor, apparently knows where she came from, what her first name is and whether her real name is Evans. That she nursed Mr. Schenk, and that she knew sensational developments in the alleged attempt at murder, was all that has been allowed to reach the public concerning her. For this reason she became known as the "Woman of Mystery," and the crowd in the court room was more attentive than usual when she took the stand.

HER REAL NAME.

The mystery of Miss Evans' name was dispelled by the first question put to her by Prosecutor Handlan.

"My real name is Alma J. Evans, and I am a graduate nurse," said Miss Evans, in reply to a question.

"My home is at Short Creek, W.Va. and I was called into the Schenk case in my professional capacity."

"Where did you first meet Mrs. Schenk?" she was asked.

"At a Sunday school picnic about four years ago," she replied.

Miss Evans said that during the past three years she had been doing private nursing.

Miss Evans swore that little Robert Schenk, a son of the sick man, had also been poisoned, or at least he showed symptoms identical with those of his father and that the doctor declared him to be a very sick boy. This was the first evidence brought out to support the State's contention that Mrs. Schenk had been willing to sacrifice her children.

Fielding Gets Word to be More Liberal with U.S.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 12.—When the tariff negotiations between representatives of Canada and the United States were resumed to-day, they had reached the stage of "expert testimony." Canada had called into the conference at the State Department two of her tariff experts, John McDougall, deputy commissioner of customs, and James A. Russell, tariff expert of the Department of Finance. These Government authorities on tariff questions were summoned to lend support to the conference negotiations by quoting facts and figures.

The inference is drawn in some quarters that Canada has been placed on the defensive and had been obliged to offer detailed evidence to prove the justness of her position. A new phase was given the discussion by the receipt of the Canadian negotiators of fresh instructions from their Government.

It is understood that a serious breach was averted by this act of the Canadian Government. That the Canadians were directed to offer more liberal terms here is the general belief to-day, as it was understood that the negotiations were expected to continue for several more sessions, whereas two days ago it was thought a termination would be reached in a few hours.

Another conference of the Newfoundland Cabinet members was held today with Chancellor Shandler Anderson, of the State Department, on the question of amending the fisheries regulations. There was some hope entertained at the beginning of the conference that the end of the discussion would be in sight at the conclusion of the day's session. Positive results and genuine accomplishment are confidently looked for in these negotiations.

Died To-day.

Dannemora, N.Y., Jan. 6.—Dominick Ferrara and Vincent Leonardo, young Italians from Albany, who murdered a rent collector at the behest of the Blackhand, went to the electric chair in Clinton prison this morning. Just before he was strapped in the electrodes, Leonardo made a confession which substantiated the evidence of the Italian detective, who had himself placed in a cell next to the accused men before their trial.

A Critical Time for Chinese---Emperor Keeps His Queue

FREQUENT CLASHES OCCURRED BETWEEN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY AND THE THRONE.

Emperor Keeps the Queue—Won't Cut Salaries or Dismiss Clerks—Will Try to Keep Order.

Pekin, Jan. 12.—The National Assembly, which met on Ortober 3, has adjourned, after a session that has been characterized by frequent clashes with the Throne and the Grand Council, but which nevertheless has been productive of good in its special mission of preparing the way for a general Parliament in 1913.

The Palace and the Assembly each appear to have learned a lesson from the deliberations just closed. The Throne has been made aware that the people are determined to have a voice in the government. On the other hand the radical element has been given to understand that ill-advised legislation or movements designed to undermine the central Government will not be tolerated.

While the Throne has given consideration to all the serious memorials presented by the Assembly, it has not hesitated to reject such as it held as unimportant. Among the demands was one that the Emperor and Prince Regents have their Queues cut off, and decree that others follow their example. The discussion of this question occupied hours of the session, and the debate at times was more than serious.

The Government has also refused the recognition of memorials, the granting of which would have a tendency to embarrass it abroad. It probably will not carry the provision of the budget for the discharge of a host of unnecessary clerks and the cutting of salaries generally.

"BUCK" IRVING GETTING OUT BEFORE COLLAPSE—WILL PUT A TEAM IN BRANTFORD.

Competition in the East—Pros. Cannot Make Headway Against the O. H. A. Teams—G. McGregor Played Again.

Berlin, Jan. 12.—A meeting of the Western Ontario Pro. League representatives held yesterday, "Buck" Irving's proposals were accepted and a new schedule ordered. W. Schruton represented Brantford.

Irving intends to take the pick of the Eastern Ontario Pro. League which, he says, is on the verge of collapse, and put a team in Brantford.

The alleged trouble in Belleville, Port Hope and Picton, given by Irving, is the conflicting of the O.H.A. games with the pros.

Irving has promised to secure a crackerjack team for Brantford, the pick of the Belleville, Port Hope and Picton teams, and has been promised support by last year's executive, who by the way, lost about $1000 last season.

The Anti-Japanese Campaign May Lead to Serious Trouble

Tokio, Japan, Jan. 12.—Special despatches from San Francisco to the Japanese newspapers, detailing the uncompromising Japanese attitude of California legislators are occupying much space, and have called forth editorials expressing surprise and regret. Japanese Government officials and other prominent men are disappointed because admittedly Japan has effectively carried out for two years a self-imposed restriction of emigration to America. Assurances were given that, irrespective of the personality of the Administration there will be no deviation from the present policy.

THE MORNING TIMES

POSSIBILITIES OF DAIRYING

The Dairy Cow Can be Made to Produce $100 Revenue Annually

There are great possibilities of increasing our national wealth from the dairy cow. Increased wealth must come from the increased production, and it is possible to increase the annual production of wealth at least 30 per cent. by improved methods in feeding and breeding dairy cows and without increasing the number of cows kept.

A Nova Scotia dairyman estimates if the average production of the dairy cow in Nova Scotia could be increased from $40 to $100 a year it would mean an added income of $7,000,000 annually for that province. This would mean an increase in the total annual production of the province from all sources of [illegible] per cent., and in the agricultural products of almost 50 per cent.

The dairy cow can be made to produce $100 gross revenue annually. This has been proved by hundreds of good dairymen in various parts of the Dominion. In no other line of industry is it possible to increase the efficiency of plants by 60 per cent. through better methods of management. No other industry offers such opportunities of increasing our national wealth as does the improvement of agriculture, and particularly of dairying. A few thousand dollars spent on agricultural education and in promoting the work of cow testing associations, would do more for this country than the millions of dollars which are now being spent in building up urban industries some of which are able to run only because of government aid and are no real addition to the wealth-producing power of the country. Governments both federal and provincial, should not hesitate to spend money on agricultural education where the possible results are so great.—The Island Farmer.

BABY AND THE SEAGULLS.

A very, very long time ago there lived in Wales a good man who was called Saint Kenneth, and this is the story that is told about him. When he was a very little baby his father, who cannot have liked him, put him into a little boat made like a basket, and then set it off from the seashore to drift away on the waves.

I am sure that the little baby would soon have been drowned in the sea, but a very strange thing happened. A lot of seagulls, which are birds you can see at the seaside, came flying down to the little basket boat, and they took hold of the baby with their claws, not hurting him in the least, and carried him right away to a ledge of rock where they had their nests.

Every day a deer came down to the ledge of rock, and it brought milk for baby. Well, baby was as happy as anybody on that ledge of rock, when one day a man who tended sheep saw him. So he took him home and put him into a cradle.

But the seagulls followed, and they carried baby back to the ledge of rock. So little Kenneth grew up on that ledge of rock, and he lived there all his life. He used to preach to the people who lived near, and that was why he was afterwards called a saint.

PLENTY OF BASS

The Hancroft Times says: About three years ago Mr. E. L. Weiss put half a dozen small black bass into Trout Lake, and these waters are now teeming with bass from five to eight inches long. A number of them have been placed in other lakes in the vicinity, and in a short time they will furnish plenty of sport for fishermen from far and near.

THE STEP THAT WAS THERE

"I want to step on a star that is not there," a man with a [illegible] face explained to a [illegible] in falling by the wayside [illegible] was there."

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

[illegible] hard, sabretache and Wellington boot, proclaimed his profession, while his blue riding-coat and cross-belts were visible in front, as he meant to have his arms free in case the necessity arose to use sword or pistol.

And he rode thus into Rai Bareilly, watchful, determined, ready for any emergency. So boldly did he advance that he darted past half a dozen men whose special duty it was to stop and question all travelers. They were stationed on the flat roofs of two houses, one on each side of the way, and a rope was stretched across the road in readiness to drop and hinder the progress of any one who did not halt when summoned. It was a simple device. It had not been seen by the man who drove the buffaloes, and by reason of Malcolm's choice of the turf by the side of the road as the best place for Nejdi. It chanced to dangle high enough to permit their passing beneath.

The sentries, though caught napping, tried to make amends for their carelessness. In the growing light one of them saw Malcolm's accoutrements and he yelled loudly!

"Ohe, bhai, look out for the Feringhi!"

Frank, unfortunately, had not noticed the rope. But he heard the cry and understood that the "brother" to whom it was addressed would probably be discovered at the end of the short street. He shook Nejdi into a canter, drew his sword, and looked keenly ahead for the first sign of those who would bar his path.

Dawn was peeping grayly over the horizon, and Ahmed Ullah, moulvie and interpreter of the Koran, standing in an open courtyard, was engaged in the third of the day's prayers, of which the first was intoned soon after sunset the previous evening. He was going through the Reka with military precision, and as luck would have it, the Kibleh, or direction of Mecca, brought his fierce gaze to the road along which Malcolm was galloping. Never did priest become warrior more speedily than Ahmed Ullah when that warning shout rang out, and he discovered that a British officer was riding at top speed through the quiet bazaar. Assuming that this unexpected apparition betokened the arrival of a punitive detachment, he uttered a loud cry, leaped to the gates of the courtyard and closed them.

Malcolm, of course, saw him and regarded his action as that of a frightened man, who would be only too glad when he could resume his devotions in peace. Ahmed Ullah, soon to become a claimant of sovereign power as "King of Hindustan," was not a likely person to let a prize slip through his fingers thus easily. Keeping up an ululating clamor of commands, he ran to the roof of the dwelling, snatched up a musket and took steady aim. By this time Malcolm was beyond the gate and thought himself safe. Then he saw a rope drawn breast-high across the narrow street, and gesticulating natives, variously armed, leaning over the parapets on either hand. He had to decide in the twinkling of an eye whether to go on or turn back. Probably his retreat would be cut off by some similar device, so the bolder expedient of an advance offered the better chance. An incomparable horseman, mounted on an absolutely trustworthy horse, he lay well forward on Nejdi's neck, resolving to jump and pick up the slack of the rope on his sword and lift it out of the way. To endeavor to cut through such an obstacle would undoubtedly have brought about a disaster. It would yield, and the keenest blade might fail to sever it completely, while any slackening of pace would enable the hostile guard to shoot him at point-blank range.

These considerations passed through his mind while Nejdi was covering some fifty yards. To disconcert the enemy, who were not sepoys and whose guns were mostly antiquated weapons of the match-lock type, he pulled out a revolver and fired twice. Then he leaned forward, with right arm thrown well in front and the point of his sword three feet beyond Nejdi's head. At that instant, when Frank was unconsciously offering a bad target, the moulvie fired. The bullet plowed through the Englishman's right forearm, struck the hilt of the sword and knocked the weapon out of his hand. Exactly what happened next he never knew. From the nature of his own bruises afterwards and the manner in which he was jerked backwards from the saddle, he believed that the rope missed Nejdi altogether, but caught him by the left shoulder. The height of a horse extended at the gallop is surprisingly low as compared with the height of the same animal standing or walking. There was even a remote possibility that the rope would strike the Arab's forehead and bound clear of his rider. But that was not to be. Here was Frank hurled to the roadway, and striving madly to resist the treble shock of his wound, of the blow dealt by the rope, and of the fall, while Nejdi was tearing away through Rai Bareilly as though all the djinns of his native desert were pursuing him.

Though Malcolm's torn arm was bleeding copiously, and he was stunned by being thrown so violently flat on his back, no bones were broken. His rage at the trick fate had played him, the overwhelming bitterness of another and most lamentable failure, enabled him to struggle to his feet and empty at his assailants the remaining chambers of the revolver which was still tightly clutched in his left hand. He missed, luckily, or they would have butchered him forthwith. In another minute he was standing before Moulvie Ahmed Ullah, and that earnest advocate of militant Islam was plying him with mocking questions.

"Whither so fast, Feringhi? Dost thou run from death, or ride to seek it. Mayhap thou comest from Lucknow. If so, what news? And where are the papers thou art carrying?"

Frank's strength was failing him. To the weakness resulting from loss of blood was added the knowledge that [illegible] he was trapped without hope of escape. The magnificent display of self-command entailed by the effort to rise and face his foes in last defiance could not endure much longer. He knew it was near the end when he had difficulty in finding the necessary words in Urdu. But he spoke, slowly and firmly, compelling his unwilling brain to form the sentences.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, [illegible] should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

NEW STATION FOR GUELPH.

While in the West last week, First Vice President Fitzhugh met a committee representing the city of Guelph, and after several hours deliberation settled the long standing question of a new station, sub-ways and track elevation which has been up on and off for the past ten years. Under the arrangement made, the Grand Trunk has to pay the city $9000, and has to construct a foot subway at Neeve St. On the other hand the city is to transfer to the Grand Trunk, Jubilee Park, one block west of the present station. Here the new station is to be erected.

A number of minor matters were settled involving the surrender by the Grand Trunk of a narrow strip of land near the old station, and the transfer to the Grand Trunk by the city of certain territory for freight facilities south of the new station. Also the city surrenders to the company certain lands which have been used by the city either for sites or lots, but which really was the property of the Grand Trunk.

All the members of the Committee expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the negotiations.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meire, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayfleete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as 'spinel twins.' Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least so far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $65,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

GRADE CATTLE FOR FARMERS

Better Keep Hands Off the "Pure Breds," which is a Specialized Business

Does the breeding and feeding of a pure-bred dairy herd pay? This each man must consider according to his location, the capital that he has to invest and his general knowledge and understanding of the business.

The pure-bred business is a specialized business. It requires a watchful care, thorough knowledge of the heredity of the cattle in your herd, constant study in breeding, a better understanding of the wants of the community in which you are located and plenty of money to invest in new blood at any time the demands of the herd call.

Records must be kept, and a daily record of each item be entered; in fact, I might say you must ever be ready with pencil and paper to mark down dates of service, birth, etc. All this must be kept right, so that if called upon you can swear to your record. Even an application for registry papers amounts to an oath.

You must keep posted on the activities of your breeders' association. You must always be ready with a pen, ink, and paper, and always cheerfully reply to all inquiring letters and postalcards received, and at times this alone will prove quite burdensome to the man on the farm.

Your sires must always be selected with the greatest care and judgment, and even then breeding requirements may force you to invest in a better one than you now own, although you may be compelled to dispose of your present high-priced sire for much less than he cost you. This alone would strongly test the nerve of many a successful farmer. Then again it is an undoubted fact that all pure-bred animals are more susceptible to disease than the more hardy grades that originated from the same breed; this renders them a more hazardous investment than grades.

All of us, by a little self-searching can tell whether or not we are strict truth-tellers or whether we are individually given to misrepresentation or evasion of the cold, straight facts. All I can say to you if you are of this class is "to keep your hands off" of the business of breeding pure-bred cattle. If you make one mistake and go wrong, your occupation and business is ruined and you have a herd of cattle on your hands that no breeder with a reputation would dare to buy, even though he was satisfied that they were good individuals and worth the money you were asking for them. The discriminating buyer will study the breeder's pedigree fully as closely as he will that of the animal.

With grades, on the other hand, a man can start on a very little capital to lay the foundation for a successful business, and, with the occasional purchase of a well-bred sire, he will be able by careful feeding and judicious selection to build up a good working herd of cows. By raising all of the best heifers that come from good cows and feeding them so that they will be large enough to come to profit in the dairy by the time they are twenty-six to thirty months of age, he may expand the business as time goes on. If he will watch all the details of the business and use good judgment in selecting his first breeding bull to correct the deformities and deficiencies that may exist in the cows, and not be constantly trying new combinations, he will have in a few generations as good cows for all practical purposes as the pure-breds from which the grades were derived.—W. M. K., in Grain Growers' Guide.

FEEDING GRAIN TO FOWLS

Better Give It to Them in Straw if Available

Whenever grain in the straw is available use it for fowl feeding. It is the best system of feeding of any I ever tried. It delights the fowls and keeps them in grand trim. It is a real boon to fowls in confinement, and those at liberty never tire of it. The nature of all fowls is to scratch and search for food, however small the particles. They seem to enjoy this more than having it shoved down their throats in handfuls. Gobbling all their food up in a few minutes to be succeeded by hours of idleness is not in harmony with their natural habits. This is apt to induce mischief. What else is it but idleness that encourages feather-eating, which is such an objectionable habit? Over-fatness is also a result; then eggs are few. The busy hen is always the thrifty one, and all are kept industrious when corn can be picked from the straw. Give them a full furnished wisp in the morning and they will work at it all day. They will turn and re-turn it, and strive for the last pick. It is delightful to witness, and fills the egg-basket. No food is more healthy for fowls than oats, barley and wheat. When in well-harvested straw it is prime, and the fowls know it. They leave bucketfuls of food to go straw-scratching. Giving vacant straw to amuse them is a delusion they quickly detect: then they cease work, whereas, if they eat every particle of grain out of the straw every morning they will be at it all day as brisk as ever. Never throw it down in the wet or muck. Put it on a clean surface under cover. The vacant straw can be removed before it accumulates too much. It will pay all to buy a quantity of grain in the straw and store it for daily use.

It is poor economy to keep old hens or old roosters. Hens are at their best at three years old, and when kept longer are apt to give poor returns. Roosters should never be kept longer than two or three years.

LAMENESS AND HORSE-SHOEING

Many Defects in Horses' Feet Can be Cured in the Blacksmith Shop

Dr. W. J. Taylor, a noted veterinarian, has made some interesting suggestions about horse shoeing. Many of the defects which cause lameness according to this experienced teacher, can be cured or relieved by proper shoeing. For corn, remove the pressure by cutting away the hoof at the point of contact with the corn, says Dr. Taylor, so as to relieve the pressure, and support the shoe if necessary by a half-bar. There are two kinds of founder, the true founder or the hoof founder, and the grain founder. The symptoms of these two are very much alike, but the former can be recognised by the fact that in this condition the hoof instead of being arched upward between the frog and the edge of the hoof bulges downward. This can be relieved by shoeing with a full-bar. The grain founder is due to feeding when the animal is too warm. For contracted heel, the shoe should be hinged at the toe, and provided with a thumb screw at the heel by which the tips of the shoe can be gradually pressed apart. For forging shorten the hoof at the toe, and put on an extra plate on the shoe at the toe, the effect of which will be to weight the hoof and so bring it to the ground a little sooner. Toe crack may be caused either from some injury to the hoof, in which case it cannot be cured, or it may be merely the result of lack of shoes. In the second case it can be cured and in either case it can be relieved. Cut away the hoof slightly just at the lower end of the crack to relieve the pressure, and hold the cracked edges together by a copper plate screwed on the outer surface of the hoof with short screws. Navicular disease is a disease of the coffin-joint above the hoof, and cannot be located by the finger as there is no external sore spot. The symptom is lameness when the horse is first taken from the stable a lameness which disappears temporarily when the horse has been driven for a time. This cannot be easily cured, but the lameness can be relieved by putting on what is called a double-rocker shoe, a shoe thicker in the middle that at either toe or heel. This distributes the pressure more evenly and relieves the shock more than a flat shoe. The hoof should be kept as soft as possible by an occasionall soaking, or by allowing the horse to stand on damp earth.

TREES VS. SILKWORMS

Many Valuable Varieties of Silk Obtained from Trees

A kind of vegetable silk is obtained from a tree attaining the size of an ordinary chestnut tree, which abounds in Paraguay. It can be woven into threads, but the chief use for it at present is for the stuffing of quilts and cushions, for which purpose it seems well adapted on account of its extreme lightness. This silk resembles a glossy down, but grows in balls about six inches long and about four and a half inches in diameter.

Near Stettin, in Germany, there is a manufactory that turns out skein silk made from wood pulp. It is said that no special kind of wood is needed to furnish the pulp. The latter, after undergoing a chemical treatment, is driven by hydraulic pressure through very fine tubes. The strands thus formed are, separately, hardly perceptible to the eye. Eighteen of them twisted together make a thread of silk. The silk is very soft and of a cream color. It is not as strong as genuine silk, but there is said to be a large demand for it abroad.

GERVAIS CREAM CHEESE

This dainty little cheese is made from a mixture of new milk and cream, the mixture being in the proportion of two parts of milk to one part of 22 per cent. cream. Take a quantity of this mixture, and bring to a temperature of 86 degrees F. Add rennet at the rate of 6½ drams per 100 pounds of the mixture, or enough to bring a coagulum in three hours. When the coagulum is firm enough, dip out into huckaback cloths placed over the bowls, with a long-handled culture dipper. Then tie up by the four corners and hang to drain. The cloths should be previously scalded, and used wet. After the cheese has been hanging up for a few hours, open out the cloths and scrape down the sides to aid the draining; repeat the scraping at intervals of a few hours, until the cheese is firm enough to mould. Salting is done by means of sprinkling fine dry salt over the cheese, and working in with a table knife or bone spatula, at the rate of one ounce of salt to every four pounds of cheese.

The moulds should be lined with clean white blotting paper, and placed on a scalded straw mat or cloth, and the cheese pressed in with a bone spatula or spoon. In the winter time, a few drops of color added to the milk and cream before renneting, will improve the color of the cheese.

MENDACIOUS WINDOWS

Chancellor Prescott, of Carlisle, is anxious that stained-glass windows should tell the truth, and not represent the pictorial fiction of artists. He granted a faculty for a window which is to be erected in St. Aidan's Church Carlisle, in memory of the late Bishop Ware, of Barrow-in-Furness, subject to an amended design being submitted. He did not think angels usually wore coats-of-arms, and one of them was represented clad in the coat-of-arms of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. Oswald, King of Northumbria, who died at the age of thirty-eight, was represented as an aged man, and the artists in stained glass will now have to make him look more youthful.

MICHAEL KEIR'S CONSCIENCE

By Ada Reece

Michael Keir was lounging on a garden seat hidden from the fierce rays of the sun by a luxuriant growth of foliage, a welcome shelter to the man beneath it. At his back lay a delightfully picturesque villa smothered with a wealth of flowers that well-night blotted out the building in their decorative scheme.

But Michael Keir had no thought of his beautiful surroundings. A letter that he had crushed in the palm of his hand had driven his mind beyond the present luxury into the dim vista of bygone years and the consequences of one foolish act. And he thought her dead—the woman to whom he had given his name, the woman who had written this letter, and who had come back to claim him.

His eyes wandered mechanically to the open window. The figure of another woman flitted to and fro—a tall, graceful girl with sweet grey eyes and masses of rich brown hair, the mother of a little rosy-cheeked babe, who slept peacefully through the heat of the day, and who might come toddling soon over the lawn to kiss and hug his daddy.

Presently he arose and crossed into the house.

"What is the matter, dear?" his wife said anxiously. "You seem so restless and perturbed. Are you ill?"

He bent down to kiss her before answering.

"No, darling—that is to say, not with bodily pain."

"Oh, then it is wretched business worries?"

"Yes, dear—wretched business worries," he repeated vaguely as he sat down on a low chair and gazed through the window.

"I will not come to the house at present," the letter said, "but I warn you that before the week has passed you shall either acknowledge me to the world as your wife, or I will give information to the police—and you know the consequences. So meet me in the wood, to-night—eight o'clock, by the old boathouse—with money, plenty of it, and we will talk matters over.—Constance Keir."

She wanted money. There was no difficulty in supplying that demand. There had been, when he was struggling for gold under the broiling sun in Southern Africa, where every sovereign he snatched from that living cauldron was needed by her for clothes, jewels—and then drink.

That was the end.

He had fled to a distant State and left the drunken virago who cursed his life. Then he heard that she was dead, and hurried back glad in the knowledge of her death—glad to sink on his knees by the little mound they told him marked her resting-place, and pray.

Bah! 'Twas nothing but a ruse, so that he, thinking himself free, would marry again, then her revenge would be the greater. He saw it all now, and marvelled at his own simplicity in being so easily gulled by the vagrant loafers who had sent him the tidings, and who had pointed out the little wooden cross as hers. And now she had risen up from out of this grave of her own making to torture his life again, break the heart of a loving girl, leave their darling babe without a father's name.

He glanced up at the clock; it was time to be moving. He left the room, and drawing on a mackintosh, listened at the foot of the stairs. He could hear his wife teaching their child his evening prayer.

"God bless daddy," came in a soft, sweet voice.

"Dod bess daddy."

"And mummy."

"And mummy," the child repeated.

A mist rose before his eyes as he opened the door and walked out through the gateway.

Half-way through the woods he paused to look around.

The night was fast closing in, and the twinkling stars were discernible about the tops of the trees, whilst a heavy vapor was rising off the river, filling the air with a clammy, unnatural heat.

Presently the storm burst, and a heavy fall of rain, followed by peals of thunder and intermittent flashes of lightning, held him fast. Once more he started, and as he moved forward the woods lit up with a blinding glare and revealed to his gaze a woman standing in his path, buffeted by the raging elements, and clad only in a thin cotton gown that clung around her soaking limbs, whilst her long black hair floated unkempt and sodden in the blustering wind.

He knew her again, though years had passed since, driven mad by this woman, he had fled. But no feeling of compunction harrowed his heart, only bitterness remained.

"So, we meet again, Michael."

He looked into her face with an angry glare.

"I got your letter," he answered.

Perhaps she was not quite prepared for this cool contempt. Her bosom rose and fell with suppressed agitation.

"I'm coming back to you, Michael. It is only right for man and wife to live together, and besides—"

"What a pity you didn't think of that before," he sneered.

"You left me," she retorted, sullenly.

"Yes, for fear that I might kill you," he answered, his voice gradually rising. "Oh, it was a great temptation when you lay drunk and raving at the man whose name you had made a byword in the settlement, but I left you instead. And then—then you died." He laughed scornfully.

"I am coming back to-morrow, so you must turn that other woman out, that—"

"Be careful!" he cried, warningly.

"You must then acknowledge me to the world as your wife. I have not the faintest desire to live with you, so after that you may settle so much a year on me, and I will take a house in London, or some equally jolly place."

"Anything else?" he inquired, harshly.

"That is all—for the present," she supplemented.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS
It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amount necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

Petes Must Have Been Going Bad at Trenton

At Trenton last night, the local Intermediates went down to defeat by a score of 18 to 4. Half time score was 5—0. Trenton must have some team, but the local boys played with a bunch of cripples on their line-up—Capt. Ray had an injured leg, Kelly had a bad knee, another player had a bad thumb and altogether they had a bad night at Trenton and came home with a bad score.

Girls Play Hockey at the Brock St. Rink

At the Brock street rink between five and six last night, two teams from the Girls' Athletic Association lined up for a game of hockey. "Billy" Gibson handled the bell with little partiality and seemed to enjoy explaining why he called them back. It would be hard to say what position each one played, but the following were the opposing sides: Dot Harstone, Margaret Eastwood, Mabel Patterson, Marjorie Mann and Reta Cavanagh versus the Misses Nellie Graham, Phyllis Denne,, Ola Cavanagh, Leila Haskill and Genevieve Sanderson.

At half-time the score was 2—2. The last goal scored for Miss Harstone's team was made on an end to end rush by Miss Eastwood. Everyone was winded and they took a few minutes rest.

The last half was pretty slow and everyone seemed tired out, but some hair-splitting rushes by the Misses Patterson and Denne kept up the excitement. The final score was 5—3 in favor of Miss Harstone's team.

Do Your Hands Chap?

Zam-Buk Will Give Ease in One Night.

For badly chapped hands, cold cracks, frost bite, etc. Zam-Buk is the best known balm. Wash the hands or part affected in water as hot as can be borne. Dry with a soft towel, and then smear the Zam-Buk well over the part. If it is the hands, wear a pair of old gloves overnight. By morning the pain will be gone. Then use Zam-Buk a few more times and the cracks will be healed. Mrs. A. F. Phillips, of Ayers Cliff, Que., says: "I suffered terribly from chapped hands. At times my hands were so sore that I could almost have cried with the pain. I thought I would try Zam-Buk and see what that wonderful healing balm would do for me. I obtained a supply, and in a very short time my hands were cured."

Mrs. W. M. Baillient, of Port Hawkesbury, N.S., writes. "Some time ago my hands were very badly chapped. Ordinary ointments did not heal them, and I was advised to try Zam-Buk. To my great delight it healed my hands in a remarkably short time."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for ulcers, blood-poison, various sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises, and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c box, or post free Zam-Buk will also be found a sure from Zam-Buk Co. on receipt of price.

DOCKING OF HORSES

Dr. McPherson Condemns Practice as Wantonly Cruel and Should be Abolished.

Sir,—I have read a letter regarding the docking of horses' tails and trimming and setting up of dogs' ears, wherein Dr. J. E. Rutherford, Vet. Dir. Gen. of Canada, gives praise to an Ottawa Veterinary surgeon for being the first who has the courage to come out and say he will never dock any more horses' tails.

I think he is a little late,-or has forgotten the articles written on that subject through the columns of The Telegram, Mail and Empire, and Globe, wherein I came out flat-footed and condemned the cruel practice some years ago.

There are but few readers of this paper who have any idea what a horse has to suffer. In the first place to suit the fancy of the public, the depressor muscles of the tail have to be severed, the tail tied up over the back with pulleys and weights, and the horse kept in a narrow stall where he cannot lie down for weeks each day breaking down the adhesive tissue so that it does not heal too quickly.

After these muscles become filled in, the tail is cut off with the docking shears. The hemorrhage is stopped by pressing a red-hot iron against the arteries, thus leaving a portion of the cixogral exposed, which eventually decays and drops off.

Now, if Dr. Rutherford has taken a humane view of this subject, why does he not take the proper steps, and with his influence, have an act passed through the Dominion Government of Canada, making it a criminal offence?

We, as veterinary surgeons, are powerless of ourselves to prevent this cruel operation, while blacksmiths, liverymen, coachmen and horse dealers are daily performing this operation on the dumb animals.

I know a blacksmith in this city who gets ten dollars for docking horses' tails.

Now, I will willingly place my name on record by saying I will never dock another horse's tail or crop a dog's ears, as I consider it cruel and unnecessary, and very unbecoming to the great majority of horses and dogs respectively.

This cruel practice could easily be stopped if gone about in the right manner.

Hoping something may be done by the proper authorities to abolish this brutal practice, I remain,

Yours truly,
J. GORDON McPHERSON,
D.V.S.

Note.—What is responsible for all this cruelty? The harness horses shown in the English show-ring, at the International Horse Show in London being one of the worst examples of encouragement of a cowardly defenceless, hidious, unhorsemanlike and criminal fashion. Now is the time to blot this crime out of the page of our boasted civilization.

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS

BEFORE TREATMENT AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and careless in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Sometimes dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the top of my head, specks before my eyes, dizzy spells in the morning, poor appetite, knees were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me that I was paralyzed. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, were an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

STILL ANOTHER POSTMASTER TELLS

WHY HE PINS HIS FAITH TO DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Doctors Failed to Cure His Bright's Disease, but He Found Relief in Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Clam Point, Shelbourne Co., N.S., Jan. 13.—(Special)—Joshua Nickerson, postmaster here, is among the many in this neighborhood who tell of pains relieved and disease banished by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I am sixty-two years old," says the postmaster, "and I tell you why I think so highly of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Owing to a bad cold my kidneys commenced to bother me, and the trouble developed into Backache, stiffness of the joints, and finally Bright's Disease.

"I was treated by a doctor, but that did not help me much, and it was six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills that brought me relief."

Everywhere you go in Canada people tell you of the great work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing, and everyone who tells you can give you the reason why. That reason simply is that there is no case of Kidney Disease Dodd's Kidney Pills cannot cure. These people have tried them and proved this true. Backache, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Diabetes, Lumbago, Heart Disease and Bright's Disease, are some of the more serious troubles that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure, simply because these are all either Kidney diseases or are caused by diseased Kidneys.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

The Industrial Situation

Commissioner Duggan Hopeful for the Future ---Sees Possibilities of Great Industrial Development

At the Mayor's banquet on Monday evening. Industrial Commissioner Duggan spoke quite optimistically of Peterborough's chances for securing additional industries in the near future. While admitting that this city is quite illogical for a certain class of industries owing to its not being on the lake shore, he characterized it as an eminently logical site for many industrial concerns, such as those engaged in wood-working, milling and light manufacturing. Peterborough, he said, is a good distributing centre, being situated near the centre of the Dominion, and there is not a point in Canada from which it cannot draw its raw material. He could see possibilities of considerable industrial development here in the future. The Commissioner regretted that so many American concerns open to location in Canada are seeking all kinds of inducements in the way of bonuses, free sites, etc., and contended that Peterborough might quite easily have given away half a million dollars the past year in this direction. Such a policy, however, he was not prepared to endorse, and, together with those associated with him, had been endeavoring to build upon firm grounds from which he hoped to see spring such industries as are logical to conditions in this city.

Citizens are unquestionably disappointed at the results of their first investment in an Industrial Commissioner, and will anxiously look forward to a fulfillment of his optimistic assurances. That Mr. Duggan understands the industrial situation, no one who heard his speech above alluded to can doubt: and the writer knows that on more than one occasion, he has readily recognized the undesirability of some location seekers, and steered clear of the rapacity of others who evidently expected to practically establish a prospective industry upon the generosity of a confiding community. The commissioner has undoubtedly worked hard the past year and those in touch with his operation have unbounded confidence that he has laid the foundation upon which will eventually be erected an industrial superstructure of acceptable proportions. But it is just possible that Peterborough has let its opportunity pass.

The Biggest Influx of Immigration in Country's History

Immigration authorities expect an immense influx of settlers to Canada during the present year.

From Great Britain alone, the newcomers are likely to arrive in very large numbers an indication of which is given in the fact that steerage passage on all the big boats sailing in March is booked up.

It is believed by immigration officers that for the twelve months up to the end of March this year the figures for immigration to Canada from all points will be in the neighborhood of 400,000. Most of the new arrivals will, of course, go west.

TOOK MRS. SCHENK OUT AUTOMOBILING.

Clerk, Who was "Sweetheart" of Accused Woman Tells of Joyous Trips That they Had.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 13.—The prosecution in the case of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, brought out the biggest surprise of the trial this afternoon when it called Daniel Phillips to the stand. Phillips is declared by the State to have been the sweetheart of Mrs. Schenk, and it is alleged that she took long automobile rides with him and lavished a great deal of her husband's money on him.

Prosecutor Handlan questioned Phillips.

"Do you know Mrs. Schenk?"

"I have known her two or three years."

"How did you meet her?"

"She frequently made purchases at a store where I was employed."

"Were you intimately acquainted with her?"

TOOK HER OUT FOR AUTO RIDE.

"Did she ever invite you to take automobile rides with her?"

"Often."

Phillips said at first the invitations were infrequent and were merely innocent pleasure trips, but they became closer and closer together. He said they went alone and named several trysting places. He said Mrs. Schenk always provided refreshments, which usually consisted of beer and sandwiches.

"Did your relations with Mrs. Schenk become criminally intimate?" demanded Mr. Handlan of Phillips.

The jury was excluded while the lawyer argued the admissability of the witness' reply. When the court ruled that it would be proper for the judge to hear the reply and when the jury was once more in its seats, Phillips said:

DECLINED TO ANSWER.

"Your honor, I decline to answer that question, it would incriminate me and put me in disrepute."

The witness then testified that before January, 1910, his relations with Mrs. Schenk were not of a criminal nature.

TRAVERS GUILTY.

Sensational Development in Police Court This Morning — Former General Manager Faces Term in the Penitentiary.

General Manager Travers pleaded guilty in Toronto yesterday on three charges connected with the malahministration of the Farmers' Bank.

On the table in front of Magistrate Denison's dais were a score of huge banking volumes ready for reference.

Mr Hartley H Dewart, K.C., represented the accused.

Crown Attorney Corby conducted the prosecution and, after Travers had pleaded, recited many interesting facts regarding the operations of the bank.

Overfatness Condemned.

Fat, or even fattish, women readers who want to be in the mode this year must understand that the demand is for lines, not curves, and govern themselves accordingly.

That means OFF with the fat. It has become a duty. Many are trying exercise or dieting; but it is certain they will find these methods too slow and unreliable. The cheapest and safest way to get in form for the Directoire mode is by means of Marmola Prescription Tablets. Any druggist (or Marmola Co., 1192 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich.) will give you a large sized case of these little fat reducers, containing a good, generous supply, for seventy-five cents, and even this quantity should be enough to make a decided impression on your excess fat. Many have lost as much as a pound a day.

These Marmola Prescription Tablets may be used with impunity and likewise perfect confidence, for, being made strictly in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription, they are, of course, quite harmless. They are rather beneficial than otherwise, in fact, never disturbing the stomach or causing a wrinkle of the flesh.

Relentless War Upon Freemasons Ordered

Montreal, Jan. 13.—Relentless war upon Freemasons is commanded by Archbishop Bruchesi in a regular letter sent to every Roman Catholic clergyman in the diocese of Montreal.

Parish priests are enjoined to be prompt in repressing Freemasonry wherever it may appear among the faithful.

Special sermons are to be preached and the International Masonic movement is to be denounced from the pulpit as "occult, lying, and anti-religious."

Priests are to "unmask Freemasonry's unlovely countenance," and then "strike at the heart," at the same time doing all they can to prevent money entering their coffers.

Warnings are to be given against individual Freemasons, especially leaders.

SOCIALISM CONDEMNED.

The priests are also instructed to attack Socialism, warning the people to have nothing to do with it, and pointing out the falsity of its teachings concerning labor and property.

War is also ordered to be waged upon what are described as dangerous books and newspapers.

WILL FIGHT EDICT

"We Freemasons are evidently considered as outlaws," said a prominent French member of the order, but we have rights which we will maintain by law at necessary." Mgr. Bruchesi, in his New Year's message given to English newspapers, said we should all recognize that there must and always will be difference of opinion among men, and that we should give those who differ from us in politics in religion credit for as much sincerety as we ourselves possess. French Freemasons are seemingly to be ruled out of human society altogether, but if this policy is carried on a sensational shuffle is certain.

MINISTERS ENTERTAINED.

By Rev. Canon Davidson on Thursday Evening.

Canon Davidson entertained the Ministerial Association to a delightful luncheon Thursday evening.

Those in attendance were: Rev. R. Pogue, Rev. W. C. Riddiford, Rev. G. W. Henderson, Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. Charles Carpenter, Rev. H. C. Coon, Rev. H. J. Keith, Rev. J. W. Gregory, Lakefield, and Rev. I. Couch.

Messages of regret at their inability to be present were received from Rev. Mr. Trumpour, Rev. Mr. Fee, and Rev. Mr. Brown.

Luncheon was served in the spacious dining room of the rectory, Halpany's orchestra playing several entertaining selections during the meal.

After luncheon the company adjourned to the drawing room, where each minister presented a striking thought from his recent reading. The subjects were discussed at some length.

The gathering adjourned at a late hour and the guests expressed their heartiest appreciation of the hospitality of their host and hostess.

CLEVER GOATS.

Do a Variety of Wonderful Tricks at the Royal Theatre.

The splendid act by Mr. Herb. Kendry's troupe of five trained goats at the Royal theatre this week, earned the unqualified admiration of all who have seen them. The clever animals are in charge of Maurice Prince and Miss Wynn and perform a score of tricks and bring down the house. They roll barrels backwards and forwards and jump through them, one of them sits for his photograph while another manipulates the camera, and a third "butts" into the game by upsetting the instrument.

The most hazardous and thrilling stunt that the goats do is probably the one that concludes the act and that is when they walk a plank which is so narrow that it amounts to little more than a rope. When one of the goats walks the plank backwards and repeats this on the return trip the climax is reached and the applause leaves no doubt of the audience's appreciation of the skilful work of the little animals.

The act opens nicely with Gertrude Wayne seated on a swing suspended by what represents ropes of flowers and the shepherd boy (Little Prince) and the goats are behind a low fence at the back of the stage. Prince says his goats can do what the circus goats did and the performance begins. The act never lags from the commencement and has the merit of real novelty.

Not for a long time has the theatre public witnessed such a novel and truly wonderful vaudeville performance. There is a laugh every minute while the curtain is up and the phenomenal stunts of these animal artists of the stage is a feature of amusement and study that should be taken advantage of by the public. The stage settings are of an elaborate nature depicting scenes of goatland and the scenic effects produced lend a very pleasing embellishment to the performance.

Special Sale of Oranges.

The largest shipment of oranges ever made into this territory has been received by local dealers for the special "Sunkist sale next week. Sunkist oranges are especially fine at this time of the year. They are a pleasant diversion from other fruits and take the place of heavier foods. Sunkist oranges are seedless and young and old can eat them freely as they are beneficial to all ages and conditions.

MOUNTED PATROL AT BORDER POINTS.

Police Will Keep Out Undesirables Who Want to Come to Canada to Reside.

Windsor, Jan. 13.—The new plan for handling the undesirable immigrant question is said to include provisions for mounted Provincial police at the border points such as Niagara Falls Windsor, etc. This will make possible a better patrol. It is well known that since the Provincial Police have been working in conjunction with the Immigration Department, hundreds of undesirables have been turned back again into the United States. The new police will have great powers and may make people go back if, in their own opinion, they think they are not wanted in Canada.

Child Born on Train.

Montreal, Jan. 13.—An unknown woman, who boarded a Central Vermont train at Fairham this morning, gave birth to a baby boy a short time afterwards. Both mother and child were in fairly good shape on arrival here and were taken to the Maternity Hospital.

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

"I have no papers, and if I had, who are you that demand them?" he said. "I am an officer of the Company, and I call on all honest and loyal men to help me in my duty. I promise—to those who assist me to reach Allahabad—that they will be—pardoned for any past offences—and well rewarded."

The room swam around him and the grizzled-aged moullah became a grotesque being, with dragon's eyes and a turban like a cloud. Yet he kept on hoping against imminent death itself that his words would reach some willing ear.

"Any man—who tells General Neill at Allahabad that help is needed at Lucknow will be made rich. Help at Lucknow immediately. I, Malcolm-sahib of the 2nd Cavalry say."

He collapsed in the grasp of the man who were holding him.

"Thou has said enough, dog of a Nazarene. Take him without and hang him," growled Ahmed Ullah.

"Nay," cried a woman's voice from behind a straw portiere that closed the arched veranda of the house. "Thou art too ready with thy sentences, moulvie. Rather let us bind his wounds and give him food and drink. Then he will recover, and tell us what we want to know."

"He hath told us already, Princess," said the other, his harsh accents sounding more like the snarl of a wolf than a human voice. "He comes from Lucknow and he seeks succor from Allahabad. That means—"

"It means that he can be hanged as easily at eventide as at daybreak, and we shall surely learn the truth, as such men do not breathe lies."

"He will not speak, Princess."

"Leave that to me. If I fail, I hand him over to thee forthwith. Let him be brought within and tended, and let some ride after his horse, as there may be letters in the wallets. I have spoken, Ahmed Ullah. See that I am obeyed."

The moulvie said no word. He went back to his praying mat and bent again toward the west, where the Holy Kaaba enshrines the ruby sent down from heaven. But though his lips muttered the rubric of the Koran, his heart whispered other things, and chief among them was the vow that ere many days be passed he would so contrive affairs that no woman's whim should thwart his judgment.

So the clouded day broke sullenly, with gusts of warm rain and red gleams of a sun striving to disperse the mists. And the earth soaked and steamed and threw off fever-laden vapors as she nursed the grain to life and bade the arid plain clothe itself in summer greenery. It was a bad day to lie wounded and ill and a prisoner, and despite the cooling showers, it was a hot day to ride far and fast.

Hence it was long past noon when a servant announced to the Begum that the sahib—for thus the man described Malcolm until sharply admonished to learn the new order of speech—the Nazarene, then, was somewhat recovered from his faintness. And about the same hour, when a subadar of the 7th Cavalry clattered into Rai Bareilly and was told that a certain Feringhi whom he sought was safely laid by the heels there, so sultry was the atmosphere that he seemed to be quite glad of the news.

"Shabash!" he cried, as he dismounted. "May I never drink at the White Pond of the Prophet if that be not good hearing! So you have caught him, brethren! Wao, wao! you have done a good thing. He is not killed?—No? That is well, for he is sorely wanted at Lucknow. Tie him tightly, though. He is a fox in guile, and might give me the slip again. May his bones bleach in an infidel's grave!—I have hunted him fifty miles, yet scarce a man I met had seen him!"

CHAPTER X.

Wherein Fate Plays Tricks With Malcolm

If it is difficult for the present generation to understand the manners and ways of its immediate forbears, how much more difficult to ask it to appreciate the extraordinary features of the siege of Lucknow! Let the reader who knows London imagine some parish in the heart of the city barricading itself behind a mud wall against its neighbors; let him garrison this flimsy fortress with sixteen hundred and ninety-two combatants, of whom a large number were men of an inferior race and of doubtful loyalty to those for whom they were fighting, while scores of the Europeans were infirm pensioners; let him cram the rest of the available shelter with women and children; let him picture the network of narrow streets, tall houses and a few open spaces—often separated from the enemy only by the width of a lane—as being subjected to interminable bombardment at point-blank range, and he will have a clear notion of some, at least, of the conditions which obtained in Lucknow when that gloomy July 1st carried on the murderous work begun on the previous evening.

The Residency itself was the only strong building in an enclosure seven hundred yards long and four hundred yards wide, though by no means so large in area as these figures suggest. The whole position was surrounded by an adobe wall and ditch, strengthened at intervals by a gate or a stouter embrasure for a gun. The other structures, such as the Banqueting Hall, which was converted into a hospital, the Treasury, the Brigade Mess, the Begum Kotee, the Barracks, and a few nondescript houses and offices, were utterly unsuited for defense against musketry alone. As to their capacity to resist artillery fire, that was a grim jest with the inmates, who dreaded the fallen masonry as much as the rebel shells.

Even the Residency was forced to use its underground rooms for the protection of the greater part of the women and children, while the remaining buildings, except the Begum Kotee, which was comparatively sheltered on all sides, were so exposed to the enemy's guns that when some sort of clearance was made in October, four hundred and thirty-five cannon balls were taken out of the Brigade Mess alone.

Before the siege commenced the British also occupied a strong palace called the Muchee Bhowun, standing outside the entrenchment and com

DOCTORS FAILED. RESTORED BY PERUNA.

Catarrh of the Lungs Threatened Her Life.

Miss Winnie Porter, Braintree, Vermont, writes: "I have been cured by Peruna.

"I had several hemorrhages of the lungs. The doctors did not help me much and would never have cured me.

"I saw a testimonial in a Peruna almanac of a case similar to mine, and I commenced using it.

"I was not able to walk on myself when I began using it. I gained very slowly at first, but I could see that it was helping me.

"After I had taken it a while I commenced to raise up a stringy, sticky substance from my lungs. This grew less and less in quantity as I continued the treatment.

"I grew more fleshy than I had been for a long time, and now I call myself well."

BANK INVESTIGATION.

After Each Bank Failure People Cry For Investigation.

Loud cries for an investigation and complaints of injustice are heard on every side since the recent Farmers' Bank failure.

After each bank failure in Canada there are loud cries for investigation and punishment. These remedies are in the nature of locking the stable door after the horse has escaped. They do not help the shareholders, who are the heaviest sufferers. Nor does the punishment of one offender operate as a warning to others. The shareholders of the Farmers' Bank are no better off because a manager of the Ontario Bank was sent to the penitentiary. We need a safeguard that locks the stable door while the horse is there. We need prevention rather than punishment. We need inspection by some external authority.

Several means of inspection are suggested: inspection by an auditor appointed by the directors, by an auditor appointed by the shareholders, by an auditor appointed by the Canadian Bankers' Association. The banking bill, to be considered by the Dominion Parliament this year, has a new section providing for a shareholders audit. The shareholders "may" at any annual general meeting, appoint an auditor to hold office for a year. If an auditor is not appointed at an annual meeting the executive council of the Bankers' Association may appoint one, on the written application of shareholders holding one-twentieth of the paid up capital of the bank concerned.

There are weak points in this provision. The inspection would be occasional and optional: and it would require concerted action on the part of the shareholders. The shareholders are an unorganized body. They have no leadership, except that of the manager and directors. What the directors advise is usually approved as a matter of course at a shareholders' meeting. When opposition is organized, it is usually too late. Only two kinds of shareholders' meetings are known to history. In one there unqualified approval of everything the directors and managers have done. In the other, everything has gone wrong: the shareholders organize, they find a leader, they cry out for investigation and punishment—too late.

There is no middle course of warning and criticism. There cannot be. A large, unorganized, uniformed body like the shareholders of a bank must trust the executive. Where the appointment of a shareholders' auditor is optional, a demand for such an audit would be regarded as a sign of danger and a mark of want of confidence. Logically a body of shareholders which asks for an audit—the audit being optional—ought to elect a new board of directors. If the demand is the result of an already shaken confidence, it may come too late.

We have had enough of spasmodic and sensational investigation. We need a kind of investigation that is quiet, constant, efficient, and preventive. It ought to be supplied by the Government rather than by the Bankers' Association.

It is a sound principle that when Parliament and the Government grant privileges to any body, they should retain a large measure of public control. This is the basis of the powers given in the Railway Commission. We give the railways large subsidies in lands and money and extensive powers of expropriation. We therefore say that the people, through a Railway Commission, shall have power to regulate rates and insist upon adquate service. We protect industries by the tariff, and we claim the right to insist that combines shall not be formed, nor excessive prices charged to the consumer.

The same principle leads up logically to Government inspection of banks. The banks are creatures of the State, enjoying great and exceptional privileges through legislations Parliament has no right to grant these privileges without insisting upon such control as shall safeguard the public interest. It puts a tremendous penalty on the shareholder, who while he looks only for a moderate interest on an investment, is compelled, by the double liability clause, to take the risk of a speculation. It should protect the shareholder, who is unable of fully protecting himself.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quarts claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quarts veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quarts vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quarts at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quarts were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quarts with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creek, limit Victoria Hill toward the courses of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quarts. Quarts pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quarts of the boulders is similar to the quarts of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quarts in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

NOURISH FEET OF HORSES WELL

Canadian Breeders of Clydesdales Should Know How to Get Good Feet and How to Keep It

Horsemen should know more about growing and keep horses' feet right than they do. Canadian breeders of Clydesdales, trained as they are to recognize merit in a wide hoof head, a broad strong foot built to wear and last on a hard city pavement, have learned a great deal more about the importance of a good foot than about how to get it, and how to keep it. The fine free step of the broad-footed Clydesdale with the foot lifted jauntily, carried straight ahead and set firmly down, tells a story of something more than nicely adjusted articulation of joints and co-ordination of muscles, with lines of power identical with those of resistance. Does it not tell a story of foot steps that are free from pain and all feeling of discomfort? Going further back, does it not mean a good free circulation of blood, and of a circulation able to take up waste matter—in fact, of a well nourished foot?

Dry hard feet tell a story of insufficient nourishment. Certain conditions may assist in producing this situation, and it is wise to correct or alleviate them as much as possible. In stables where feet appear to become dried out, attempts to correct this by stuffing the frog with wet clay have been popular. This has been a partial success at least, but it is doubtful if a horse appreciates going to bed with his feet soaked with cold mud, much more than this his owner would, although in the latter case the consequences might be more immediately disastrous.

There might be a little lost and a good deal gained if this side of the argument were kept more prominently in view by horsemen whose chargers are troubled with dry hard or contracted feet. Such means are conducive to general good health and thrift, accompanied by others well known to be useful in stimulating the nourishment of any part, by stimulating the blood circulation. Such methods as standing, "tubbing" the feet in warm water, afterwards giving a cold bath and drying thoroughly, should be well worth a patient trial for feet showing a tendency to become dry and brittle. The human fingernail when it becomes dry and brittle usually becomes thin as well. Treatment with olive oil will usually improve it in a very short time. The same could be tried on a dry brittle hoof. The use of a very light blister around the hoof head is known to be of benefit. All of such plans should appear more hopeful and more humane than standing a horse for hours in wet clay or stuffing his feet with it.—Canadian Farm.

KINDNESS AND TACT

Always Take Care to Help People in Their Own Way

Our kindly ministrations must be mixed with tact or we shall hurt more often than we help. Favors must be gently offered, not cast at the recipient. The doing of them must be considered as a privilege to ourselves, not as a benefit conferred upon another. We must be willing to help people in their own way, doing as they wish, not as we consider best; viewing the matter from their standpoint, and trying, as far as possible, to put ourselves in their place. Tact is a natural grace, but it can be cultivated to a certain extent. True kindness of heart teaches a delicacy of feeling that enables us to deal with others as we should wish to be dealt with ourselves.

Kindness may run into excess, like any other virtue, and become officiousness. This will not happen if it is kept in check by the invaluable commonsense which has been rightly defined as "sense about common things." Meddlesome persons are as trying as mosquitoes, and as such must be kept at a distance. When our kind offices are rejected we may suspect that we have been too pressing in our attentions, and look well to our doings to see where the fault lies.

HOW HORSES SLEEP

Many Sleep Standing—Others Lie Down—How They Get Up

Did you ever notice how horses sleep? Well, they don't all sleep one way, by any means. Some, in fact, a good many, sleep standing, and rarely lie down. Such a one you may approach and almost touch before he wakes up, if you come at the right time and without much noise. Others lie down, but not all one way. Usually they will settle back and drop over on one hip first. In rising they will put one front foot first and then the other, bringing up the hind parts last.

But some horses get up and down "cow fashion"—that is, they will get on their fore-knees first. Such a one may always be told by the dirty condition of his knees.

EARTHING UP CELERY

Earthing up celery is one of the main requirements necessary to make it toothsome. If unearthed the stalks are green and tough; if earthed they are blanched and crisp. In the former state it is good for nothing; in the latter it is choice and peculiarly nice. Earthing up must, therefore, not be omitted, and it should all be done before frost occurs, as if exposed then it will be injured, while earthing is a protection. Gather the leaves of each plant closely together near the top. Put a tie round them all. Break the soil along the sides down fine. Push it in between the plants with the spade; then press it round each with the hands, and take the tie off. Be sure that not a particle of soil is allowed to fall into the centre.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings read like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing"—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

Treasury stock in the Mexico Mining, Refining and Exploration company can be bought today for less than ever it can be again. The mine which we have been developing for almost two years is now on the eve of bearing income. Your Luck will be Good or Bad, just as you decide—whether to come in or stay out. Decide NOW! A line from you will give you all necessary information. Act Now.

THE TROUSERS

By A. M. Nankivell

Mrs. Thomas bought them cheap from a clothier who was selling off, and brought them home for Thomas to wear on Sundays and Bank Holidays. And, when he saw them, Thomas, who was not at the best of times a very strong man, felt absolutely ill.

He said they gave him a turn. They would have given anyone a turn—the check on them was so startling, and the cut of them was so astonishing. They were about three sizes too large for Thomas, but his wife said they were a beautiful fit—she liked clothes to be long enough to allow of being turned up at the bottom when they grew shabby.

"They'll last you a lifetime!" she said triumphantly. Thomas, knowing that there was no escape for him except in the grave, groaned.

"Eh! Did you speak?" said Mrs. Thomas, sharply.

"No, Eliza! Not me!" cried Thomas hurriedly. For he was a little man, and not a strong one, and he was very much afraid of his wife.

He dared not refuse to wear those horrors next Sunday. So he put them on, and sneaked down to breakfast, looking thoroughly ashamed of himself.

"Where's your collar?" Mrs. Thomas asked. "I put it out on the chest of drawers for you."

Thomas never wore a collar on Sundays. He had more than enough of collars during his working week at the shop. He said so. Mrs. Thomas marched upstairs, fetched the collar, and jerked it round his neck, so that the starched points poked into his chin.

"You'll do your trousers credit, or I'll know the reason why," she said, firmly.

It was Thomas's custom to spend Sunday in peacefully gardening the strip of ground behind the house. He was an excellent gardener, and had taken several prizes for his potatoes and peas. He took his spade, and went out to the potato bed to forget his sorrows in digging. The collar stud burst, and, for a time, he was almost happy, till Mrs. Thomas shrieked at him from the kitchen window.

"What are you doing? You come in here at once!"

"The garden wants a lot of seeing to, Eliza," Thomas pleaded.

"Then you'll see to it some other time. Getting your new clothes a mass of dirt! I never heard the like! Are you coming in, Alfred Thomas, or must I fetch you?"

Thomas went in, and sat down drearily with his paper and his pipe. He had hardly lighted up before Mrs. Thomas pounced on him again.

"You'll not smoke to-day if I know it," she declared. "Smelling your new clothes of 'baaco that disgraceful!" She snatched the pipe away, and knocked it out against the mantelpiece, and put it in her pocket.

Thomas dared not protest. He could not get out of sight and do as he pleased, because he shrank from going down the street and meeting his friends while he wore those horrible garments. He could do nothing but sit still and suffer, and hope that a good dinner might help him to sleep through the afternoon, and so bring the dreary day quickly to an end.

In the afternoon she took him to see her Aunt Maria. When they got home, Thomas said that he was tired, and would go to bed.

"Mind you fold your trousers carefully," Mrs. Thomas called up the stairs after him.

He bore two Sundays of torment. Then he told his troubles to his neighbor, James Harvell, and begged for help and advice.

"Have an accident with the things," Harvell said. "Tear 'em, spout 'em, give 'em to the dustman."

Thomas shook his head mournfully. "You don't know my wife," he said. "She'd never forgive me, if she found out that I'd made away with them."

"You can't grow too big for them, I suppose?"

"Not on the food I'm getting these days."

"Hire some chap to steal 'em," suggested Harvell, struck with a brilliant idea. "I'll take on the job for those new shears of yours, and a couple of packs of those prize peas."

Thomas gladly agreed to give anything to be rid of the trousers.

"She keeps them in the parlor, spread out on the sofa with a towel over them—says they won't get creased there," he confided guiltily. "I'll leave the window unlatched. You can get in easy. Mind you do the thing proper—knock the furniture about a bit, and so on—she mustn't guess that it was only the trousers you came after."

"You leave it all to me," Harvell said, comfortingly.

Thomas left the window open, and retired to bed, feeling like a criminal of the deepest dye. Fortunately, Mrs. Thomas was a heavy sleeper, and it was not till next morning that she discovered the theft. Harvell had certainly done the thing thoroughly, for, as well as the trousers, Thomas's two treasured prize cups, a bottle of whiskey, and a collection of choice seeds had vanished.

Loud were Mrs. Thomas's lamentations. Thomas, too, began to see that the path of double-dealers is hard, for, when he suggested to Harvell that the joke had been carried far enough, and that all the property, bar the trousers, should be restored, Harvell merely grinned.

"If anything comes back, your missus 'll be asking questions," he said, cheerfully. "Better let well alone." Then he demanded the shears and peas, which Thomas was forced to give him.

On Saturday night Mrs. Thomas went shopping, and returned with a large parcel and a beatific smile.

"I've got a surprise for you, Alfred," she announced. "As I was going along I passed a pawn shop, and what should I see but some of our stolen things. I walked right in, and told the man they were stolen goods, and, if he didn't let me have them cheap, I'd give him in charge."

"My cups!" cried Thomas, joyfully.

"No," said his wife, unrolling the parcel. "Your trousers. There, now, aren't you pleased?"

ORANGE WEEK!

FORTY-FIVE Carloads Coming—Are California's Finest—The "SUNKIST" Kind—ON SALE ALL NEXT WEEK!

Attractive Prices and Special Displays of "SUNKISTS" At All Dealers

Forty-five carloads of famous "Sunkist" oranges—more than 18,000 boxes—are speeding eastward by fast freight, direct from the orange groves of California.

They will be here, on sale at every dealer's next Monday morning. The sale will continue through the week. It will be the biggest affair of its kind in history.

Last year's "Sunkist" Orange Sale was such a huge success, and everybody bought so liberally, that your local dealers were simply swamped with business. They were hardly able to supply the demand. We therefore suggest that you place your order for "Sunkist" oranges as early next week as possible. Then you will be certain of being supplied.

Every orange in every box is sound, tree-ripened and hand-picked—the most luscious, healthful fruit on the market. For "Sunkist" oranges are California's choicest crop.

Five thousand orange growers select their choicest and pack them under the name "Sunkist." Thus every "Sunkist" orange is perfect—solid, sweet and full flavored.

In "Sunkist" wrappers you get tree-ripened, hand-picked oranges of the most acceptable variety. Every orange is picked by a gloved hand. They are shipped by fast freight, and always reach your table in prime condition. Being seedless, fibreless and thin-skinned, there is but very little waste. They are the most economical oranges you can buy. Each one is packed in a germ-proof tissue paper wrapper and bears the label "Sunkist."

All Physicians Advise Oranges

Physicians and food experts advise people to eat more oranges. We are a nation of meat eaters. And in winter, especially, the system gets clogged, causing congestion, colds, fevers, etc. Those who eat fresh, wholesome fruit freely, seldom require medical treatment.

Serve Them for Breakfast and in Salads and Desserts

Oranges are the ideal breakfast fruit and "between meals" lunch. For salads, they are indispensable. Orange ices, sherbets, puddings, etc., are very popular and delicious desserts.

"Sunkist" by the Box

"Sunkist" oranges reach you in such perfect condition, fresh from the orange groves, they will keep for weeks. Your dealer can make you a handsome saving if you order a box or half box. They are cheaper than table apples, and the greatest health food.

Save Your "Sunkist" Wrappers

By saving your "Sunkist" orange wrappers you can easily secure a full set of genuine Rogers orange spoons, dessert spoons and fruit knives. The patterns shown here are our new 1911 styles, designed exclusively for us. They are as attractive and stylish as money can buy. All are Rogers quality, standard A-No. 1 plate and are fully guaranteed by the maker. No advertising appears on any of our premiums.

Read on the right the description of these valuable premiums and how to get them. (71)

It is understood the matter will be disposed of before the end of the month.

Increased Travel.

Further increase in travel is expected next year when a passenger over a number of branch lines will be undertaken. A line from Tofield to Calgary is expected to be completed next fall, but it is likely that a train service will be given over a considerable portion of the line early in the summer. The line from Melville north through Yorkton to Canora, which is ultimately to form part of the Hudson's Bay line, has been completed as has also a large section of the line between Melville and Regina.

Unique Entertainment.

The ladies of All Saints' Women's Guild will give a rather unique entertainment on Tuesday, January 24. The ladies are sparing neither pains or expense in making this affair one of the most enjoyable of its kind ever held in the city. 25c will pay for supper and entertainment. The Times hopes to see the church filled to overflowing, as the ladies deserve every support.

VOL. XXXIV NO. 12 PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO, MONDAY JANUARY 16, 1911 PRICE TWO CENTS

Election of School Trustees Inquired Into

A very large crowd thronged the Court Room of the Court House on Saturday at 2 o'clock to hear the complaints of the Protestant ratepayers of P.S.S. No. 8, Otonabee which were understood to be that no meeting of the board of trustees had been held during the year and that no report of any kind was made to the ratepayers, and also that the election of Trustee O'Connor was irregular. Mr. O'Connor, for the defence, maintained strongly that nothing should be inquired into under the ratepayers' application, but the election of trustee as that was the only item mentioned in it.

Mr. Burnham, for the compainants, said that the complainants had supposed that it would have been considered by both sides desirable that whatever grievance the complainants supposed they had should be ventilated on an occasion like this when all were together before the Inspector, but if Mr. O'Connell insisted on the strict reading of the Statute and the Inspector sustained him, his clients would submit. The inspector was of opinion that the contention of Mr. O'Connell should prevail so the investigation hammered down to an enquiry into the manner of the election of Trustee O'Connor. The chairman, Mr. Hazlitt, swore that while he wouldn't swear to it, he thought the vote had been 21 for and 20 against. At the Inspector's request Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Burnham, with four of the parties interested retired, and on going over the voters' list and the vote decided that the vote of those qualified had been 19 for and 17 against.

Mr. O'Connor's election was therefore confirmed. The "complaint" against the management of the school section's affairs may be heard at a later date under another form of procedure if the complainants decide to ask for it. The "complaint" against the opportunity allowed by the Schools Act for unwelcome religious teachings does not come before the local authorities at all, but has been sent supported by affidavits to the Lieutenant-Governor. The desire is to abolish all religious teaching and possibility of undue religious influence on the school premises of public schools.

Apparently the reason why the complaint of the Protestant minority was not brought before the inspector regarding the alleged mismanagement of school affairs, was that it is not possible under the Schools Act to do so. The Act allowing of appeal with respect to proceedings at the annual meeting only.

C.G.E. TOOL ROOM SEVEN DEFEATED THE OFFICE STAFF SEPTETTE

In the Mercantile league Saturday night a fast game of hockey was played between the Tool Room and Office teams of the C.G.E. Bill Rose refereed impartially and had the game in hand at all times. The stellar work of the office team's goal keeper saved a larger score and it is thought by the many who watched the game, that if there had been a little more time, the office team would have won out. The final score was: Tool Room 2, Office 1.

THAT MACHINE SHOP AGGREGATION CAN PLAY SOME FAST HOCKEY

The following has been handed to the Times on the game Saturday night:

Tin Ribs Mahoney's aggregation of wood-sluggers had their hockey ambition shattered in a game with the Machine shop team Saturday night. It was simply a little work-out for the speedy bunch from the Machine shop, who had it over their husky opponents at every stage of the game.

The game started at 10 o'clock with Orville Kenailley handling the whistle. He did not have the game very well in hand as the players refused to observe a penalty when one was handed out and roughhouse tactics were often used, mostly by the followers of the Tin Ribs. The goal umpires, behind the goal of the "Never Wins" had to work in relays. Hackenschmidt Hurtubise was practicing all his latest "holds" and pugilist Spillsbury training for the coming battle with the world famous Jack Johnston. The referee had all he could do to look after the facing the rubber off after each goal and did not bother much about the penalties. The last account of the score, as remembered by the referee, was 15—0 in favor of the machine shop.

It is hoped these "Has Beens" will hang up their sticks to remind them of the time when they were young.

LONDON TO FIGHT YANKEE MEAT TRUST WITH MUNICIPAL COLD STORAGE PLANT

THE SCHEME WILL HAVE FAR-REACHING RESULTS UPON THE TRADE OF THE COUNTRY.

Eighty Per Cent. of Supplies Consumed by Metropolis are of Foreign Origin—A Big Cold Storage Warehouse at Smithfield Market.

London, Jan. 14.—The American Meat Trust, which has just been patting itself on the back for having apparently succeeded in forming 6a world-wide concern able to dictate to the people of all nations what they should eat and what prices they must pay, is doomed to meet with great disappointment here in London, for the greatest city in the world is seriously thinking of placing the meat business entirely under its control, and the first step in this direction immense municipal cold storage plants are to be constructed at the Smithfield market, where practically all meat consumed in London is handled and sold.

A committee has been formed for the purpose and has been empowered not only to prepare plans and estimates showing the cost of municipal cold stores, but also to obtain information as to the existing private cold stores which the city might find it advantageous to purchase in order to secure the complete management of the cold storage around the market.

The establishing of municipal cold stores may have far-reaching results upon the meat trade.

FRENCH NATIONALIST LEADER WELCOMED BY HUNDREDS AT MONTREAL STATION.

Will Fight for His Race—Was at Rome and Received Much Spiritual Consolation—Students Escort Him.

Montreal, Jan. 14.—The hold that Mr. Henri Bourassa has upon his compatriots was strikingly shown last night when the Nationalist leader returned from the trip to Europe. Despite the fact that no attempt was made to organize any demonstration a big crowd of friends and supporters gathered at the C.P.R. station and he was given an enthusiastic reception on his arrival by the Rutland train from New York, and was escorted by the cheering crowd to a carriage in waiting. He was called on for a speech and spoke briefly, but his remarks were characterized by their usual vigor. He thanked his friends for their splendid reception, and said. "I am with you to-night in better health and more vigor than ever, and ready to continue the fight which I began some time ago for justice for my race, for the good of my country, and for equal rights for all."

Mr. Bourassa added that he had visited the various centres of Europe including the city of Rome, and had obtained great consolation from his visit to "the centre of Christianity." Mr. Bourassa closed by stating that he hoped to be without delay in his seat in the legislature, to continue the combat.

The Nationalist leader was then escorted by a large crowd of his admirers and a body of Laval students to his residence.

HE HAD ECZEMA 25 YEARS AND DOCTORS SAID "NO CURE."

Yet Zam-Buk Has Worked Complete Cure.

This is the experience of a man of high reputation, widely known in Montreal, and whose case can readily be investigated. Mr. T. M. Marsh, the gentleman referred to, lives at 101 Delorimier Avenue, Montreal, and has lived there for years. For twenty-five years he had eczema on his hands and wrists. The disease first started in red blotches, which itched, and when scratched became painful. Bad sores followed, which discharged and the discharge spread the disease until his hands were one raw, painful mass of sores. Just think of this state of affairs continuing for twenty-five years!

In that time four eminent medical men tried to cure him, and each gave up the case as hopeless in the end. Naturally, Mr. Marsh tried remedies of all kinds, but he also, at last gave it up. For two years he had to wear gloves day and night so terrible was the pain and itching when the air got to the sores.

Then came Zam-Buk! He tried it, just as he had tried hundreds of remedies before. But he soon found that Zam-Buk was different. Within a few weeks there were distinct signs of benefit, and a little perseverance with this great herbal balm resulted in what he had given up all hope of—a complete cure! And the cure was no temporary cure. It was permanent. He was cured nearly three years ago. Interviewed the other day, Mr. Marsh said: "The cure which Zam-Buk worked has been absolutely permanent. From the day that I was cured to the present moment I have had no trace of eczema, and I feel sure it will never return. Having suffered for twenty-five years, I had naturally concluded that my case was incurable, and I regard my cure as a modern miracle."

If you suffer from any skin trouble, cut out this article, write across it the name of this paper, and mail it, with one cent, stamp to pay return postage, to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. We will forward you by return a free trial box of Zam-Buk. All druggists and stores sell this famous remedy. 50c. box, ar three for $1.25. Refuse harmful substitutes.

Brutally Murdered Old Miser for His Gold

SIGNS OF STRUGGLE UPSTAIRS AND IN KITCHEN AND OUT IN THE SNOW.

Two Men Committed Deed—Had a Team of Horses and Sleigh—They Tied Body to a Post.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 14.—The mutilated body of Franz Lovinski, an aged Polish-Canadian farmer near Wellesley, a village of Waterloo county, about 18 miles from here, was discovered by neighbors yesterday, bound by wire to a post outside the house. It was evidently another case of an old miser being murdered for his gold.

Lovinski, a man of about 70 years had his farm on the second concession west of the village of Wellesley, in North Waterloo, 12 miles from here. His home was an old log house where he had lived entirely alone since the death of his wife six years ago. There are no children.

The crime of which he was the victim became known at 10 o'clock yesterday morning when a neighbor, Mr. Leyes, was passing, and his attention was attracted by the bellowing of cattle in Lovinski's barn. Leyes went into the barnyard and was horrified to find there the body of Lovinski, with one leg tied with wire to a post near the house. Other neighbors came, and their examination showed that the unfortunate man's head was battered to such an extent as to be unrecognizable. About 50 yards away from the house was found a hammer covered with blood with which the deed had apparently been committed. The fact that the cattle were hungry makes it appear that Lovinski had been dead, and his body been in the open for two nights.

Miss Gertrude Wood of Millbrook, and Miss Madge McGill, of Shicago, were bridesmaids to Miss Edith A. Spohn, at her wedding in the Anglican church at Penetangu shene on Wednesday afternoon.

Vancouver's Churches will All be Taxed

Vancouver, Jan. 14.—By a vote of four to one the electors of Vancouver have decided against a policy of exemption of churches from taxation. Other plebiscites advised building legislation, restricting height of buildings to ten storeys, with total of 120 feet, and also covered methods of civic government. Latter vote showed sentiment equally divided between present form of Mayor and council government, and a board of control system. Fully twice the number of electors favored the latter idea. Its advocates look for its establishment here next year.

Shackleton Advocates Sanatorium Near Pole

London, January 14.— Sir Ernest Shackleton, who got nearer to the South Pole than any other explorer, has declared his intention of visiting Spitzbergen this summer.

He further voices the opinion that it would be a good thing if a sanitorium for consumptives could be established in the polar regions. A two months' stay amid the ice and snow of Spitzbergen would do wonders for a persons suffering from lung and chest troubles, declared Sir Ernest. He points out that Arctic air is absolutely pure, and beneficial to all complaints.

Claims that Case Against Mrs. Schenk Has Been Clinched

SHE LOVED A PIANO SALESMAN AND WANTED SCHENK OUT OF WAY SAYS PROSECUTION.

Some Thrilling Testimony is Expected — Strong Evidence Against Woman Accused of Poisoning Her Husband.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Claiming to have established through two main points in the State's fight to convict Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk of attempting to poison her husband, Prosecuting Attorney Handlan expressed his belief to-day that the case against the defendant had been clinched.

"We have established the fact that two kinds of poison were administered to John O. Schenk, and we have established the motive through the testimony of Daniel Phillips," declared Mr. Handlan.

"Mrs. Schenk was in love with Daniel Phillips, the piano salesman, with whom she went for auto rides, that is the reason she wanted to get rid of her husband. Lundy Wilson, Mrs. Schenk's chauffeur, will give testimony of a highly sensational nature, in fact, his testimony will be the real thriller of the trial. Nurse Kline will testify as to Mrs. Schenk's being the only one who administered the poison.

"We have not yet decided whether Mr. Schenk shall be put on the stand."

Dr. J. B. Thornton, the medical expert, was the first witness summoned by the State to-day. The case was late in getting started because of several minor criminal cases which had been set for hearing.

JUROR HAS A SON.

Albert Lash, the youngest juror on the panel, received the congratulations of the lawyers to-day when he came into court. A young son had been born at his home during the night.

Mrs. Schenk smiled brightly at the juror when she heard the news.

After shaking hands with her lawyers she read a morning paper while Dr. Thornton gave the first testimony. When she was asked what she thought of the case so far, she said: "I am perfectly satisfied."

GAVE HIM DIAMOND PIN.

Dan. Phillips, who testified against Mrs. Schenk yesterday appeared in court to-day wearing one of the coats and a diamond pin that the defendant had given him. Reports that Mrs. Schenk had received a number of offers to go into vaudeville were denied by her to-day.

THEY CAME FROM POISON.

After explaining the difference between proprietory and patent medicine, Dr. Thornton was asked if basophilic granules, such as he had discovered in the blood of John O. Schenk, could have been formed by illness.

"No, they come from poison," said the doctor.

"From what part of Schenk's anatomy did you take the blood for examination?"

"The ear?"

The witness was then asked as to the effect of the various kinds of poison.

Upon cross-examination, Dr. Thornton was made to admit that after his first diagnosis he thought Schenk merely suffering from a serious illness.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 13.—The prosecution in the case of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, brought out the biggest surprise of the trial this afternoon when it called Daniel Phillips to the stand. Phillips is declared by the State to have been the sweetheart of Mrs. Schenk, and it is alleged that she took long automobile rides with him and lavished a great deal of her husband's money on him.

THE MORNING TIMES

MONDAY, JANUARY 16, 1911.

POACHING BY AMERICANS.

The attention of Mr. Clifford Sifton and the Conservation Commission is drawn to this paragraph from the president's remarks at the annual meeting of the Canadian Bank of Commerce: "In halibat fishing we own another great source of wealth, but we regret to have to repeat that nothing of much practical value is being done to stop the extensive poaching by Americans. If by indifference or because of the difficulty of making Governments believe that vigorous action is necessary, we are robbed of the value of this natural asset, the damage to Canada will be incalculable. Deep sea fishing is our opportunity to build up on the Pacific coast communities of white fishermen without which we shall suffer as a nation in a much more serious manner than from the mere loss of money. Capital in a large way awaits the development of Pacific Coast fishing. Markets exist in our own country, and halibut and herring fishing if protected will exceed the great salmon industry in value. Shall we preserve our rights?"

BRINGING UP TWO MOOSE

Mr. Samuel Webber, an English gamekeeper, who was for some years in the service of the Duke of Northumberland, and is now in charge of a lumber depot at Beauchine, near Mattawa, on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River, tells, in Rod and Gun, a most interesting story of the rescue and bringing up of two young moose—a bull and a heifer.

The animals were found fast in a log jam, and as they were emaciated and apparently deserted by their mother, it seemed clear that they had been in a dangerous position for some time. When brought to land they could not walk and were left on the banks of the river for some time in the hope that the mother would respond to their calls and return to them. As, however, this did not happen, Mr. Webber gave them some cow's milk, which they drank greedily, and placed them in a stable. Under such kindly care they soon recovered and thrived apace. When allowed out they continued tame, and though wandering a little distance to feed they returned for thir drink of milk both night and morning. Whenever they caught sight of their rescuer they followed him like dogs, and in one instance such attention and demonstration of good will appeared dangerous.

Fishing from a canoe in the river one evening, Mr. Webber was astonished to see one of the moose close to him, swimming strongly and with the evident determination of getting into the canoe with him. For some minutes he had an anxious time, but finally succeeded in eluding the unwelcome attention of his pet, and giving up fishing, returned to land in order that he might escape such companionship in a frail canoe.

The moose were offered to Messrs. Holt, Renfrew & Co. for their wild animal enclosure at Montmorency Falls, but the members of the firm stated that they hadn't been able to rear moose and they were afraid a train journey would kill the animals. Mr. Webber also received a permit from the Minister allowing him to keep the moose.

From his experience Mr. Webber argues that moose can only be reared under certain conditions. He has no doubt he could keep them in the bush as long as he wishes by allowing them to roam about so that they may get weeds and vegetation from the river bed. With lakes and rivers containing vegetable matter suitable for them the moose will live and thrive. He is doubtful, however, of their existence in a park unless it is a large one with plenty of water.

PAT ON BAPTISM

Pat who was noted for a quick tongue was digging potatoes when the parish priest came by. By way of a pleasant salutation the priest said:

"Good mornin' to ye, Pat, an' what kind of p'rtatoes are ye diggin'?"

"Raw ones, your riv'rince.'

"Och, yp're so smart. I'll just give you a question on the catechism. What is baptism?"

"It used to be four shillin's afore you came, but now it's twinty shillin's."

THE RED YEA.

LOUIS TRACY.

spanning the stone bridge across the river Goomtee. A few hours' experience revealed the deadly peril to which its small garrison was exposed, and Lawrence decided at all costs to abandon it. A rude semaphore was erected on the roof of the Residency, and on the first morning of the siege, three officers signaled to the commandant of the outlying fort, Colonel Palmer, that he was to spike his guns, blow up the building and bring his men into the main position. The three did their signaling under a heavy fire but they were understood. Happily, the prospect of loot in the city drew off thousands of the rebels after a meet, and Colonel Palmer marched out quietly at midnight. A few minutes later an appalling explosion shook every house in Lucknow. The Muchee Bhowun, with its immense stores, had been blown to the sky.

That same day Lawrence received what the Celtic soldiers among the garrison regarded as a warning of his approaching end. He was working in his room with his secretary when a shell crashed through the wall and burst at the feet of the two men. Neither was injured, but Captain Wilson, one of his staff-officers, begged the Chief to remove his office to a less exposed place.

"Nothing of the kind," said Sir Henry, cheerfully. "The sepoys don't possess an artilleryman good enough to throw a second shell into the same spot."

"It will please all of us if you give in on this point, sir," persisted Wilson.

"Oh, well, if you put it that way, I'll turn out to-morrow," was the smiling answer.

Next morning at eight o'clock, after a round of inspection, the general worn out by anxiety and want of sleep, threw himself on a bed in a corner of the room.

Wilson came in.

"Don't forget your promise, sir," he said.

"I have not forgotten, but I am too tired to move now. Give me another hour or two."

Lawrence went on to explain some orders to his aide. While they were talking another shell entered the small apartment, exploded, and filled the air with dust and stifling fumes. Wilson's ears were stunned by the noise, but he cried out twice:

"Sir Henry, are you hurt?"

Lawrence murmured something, and Wilson rushed to his side. The coverlet of the bed was crimson with blood. Some men of the 32nd ran in and carried their beloved leader to another room. Then a surgeon came and pronounced the wound to be mortal. On the morning of the 4th Lawrence died. He was conscious to the last, and passed his final hours planning and contriving and making arrangements for the continuance of the defence.

"Never surrender!" was his dying injunction. Shot and shell battered unceasingly against the walls of Dr. Fayrer's house in which he lay dying, but their terrors never shook that stout heart, and he died as he lived, a splendid example of an officer and a gentleman, a type of all that is best and noblest in the British character.

And Death, who did not spare the Chief, sought lowlier victims. During the first week of the siege the average number killed daily was twenty. Even when the troops learnt to avoid the exposed places, and began to practise the little tricks and artifices that tempt an enemy to reveal his whereabouts to his own undoing, the daily death-roll was ten for more than a month.

There was no real safety anywhere. Even in the Begum Kotee, where Winifred and the other ladies of the garrison were lodged, some of them were hit. Twice ere the end of July Winifred awoke in the morning to find bullets on the floor and the mortar of the wall broken within a few inches of her head. That she slept soundly under such conditions is a remarkable tribute to human nature's knack of adapting itself to circumstances. After a few days of excessive nervousness the most timorous among the women were heard to complain of the monotony of existence!

And two amazing facts stand out from the record of guard-mounting, cartridge-making, cooking, cleaning, and the rest of the every-day doings inseparable from life even in a siege. Although the rebels now numbered at least twenty thousand men, including six thousand trained soldiers, they were long in hardening their hearts to attempt that escalade which, if undertaken on the last day of June, could scarcely have failed to be successful. They were not cowards. They gave proof in plenty of their courage and fighting stamina. Yet they cringed before men whom they had learnt to regard as the dominant race. The other equally surprising element in the situation was the readiness of the garrison, doomed by all the laws of war to early extinction, to extract humor out of its forlorn predicament.

The most dangerous post in the entrenchment was the Cawnpore Battery. It was commanded by a building known as Johannes' House, whence an African negro, christened "Bob the Nailer" by he wife of the 32nd, picked off dozens of the defenders during the opening days of the siege. What quarrel this stranger in a strange land had with the English no one knows, but the defenders were well aware of his identity, and annoyed him by exhibiting a most unflattering effigy. Needless to say, the whites of his eyes, and his woolly hair were reproduced with marked effect, and "Bob the Nailer" gave added testimony of his skill with a rifle b ysbooting out both eyes in the dummy figure.

Winifred had heard of this man. Once she actually saw him while she was peeping through a forbidden casement. Knowing the wholesome detestation of her fellow-countrymen with which he was credited, she had it in her heart to wish that she held a gun at that moment, and she would surely have done her best to kill him.

He disappeared and she turned away with a sigh, to meet her uncle hastening towards her.

"Ah, Winifred," he cried, "what were you doing there? Looking out, I am certain. Have you forgotten the punishment inflicted on Lot's wife when she would not obey orders?"

"I have just had a glimpse of that dreadful negro in Johannes' House," she said.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAVE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. J. W. Hurst, organizer for the Canada Weather Insurance Company, is in the city in connection with the business of the company.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Mairs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneto, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is in distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least so far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, coalesce quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

KILLING FOWLS FOR THE MARKET

Some Useful Instructions to Amateur Poultry Keeper's Regarding Killing and Packing

There are many amateur poultry keepers who have surplus cockerels they wish to kill for the table but who find the operation unpleasant and difficult. Professional poulterers and many farmers have so much practice in killing fowls that it becomes easy and simple. The novice, however, is often unintentionally guilty of cruelty, and of causing needless pain. In his clumsy efforts to deprive the birds of life. When possible, it is desirable to have a practical lesson from a person who understands how it should be done, but this is not always to be had.

How to Kill

A method almost invariably adopted by poulterers, and one that is considered the best, is to dislocate the neck. This is accomplished by taking the bird by the legs in the left hand and grasping the head with the right, with the thumb and fingers around the throat. The fowl is then placed across the knees, breast downward, with the neck held over the right knee. The neck is then quickly and firmly extended and the head bent suddenly back with some force. By this means the neck should be dislocated just below the junction with the head. If the fowl is afterwards suspended by the legs the blood quickly flows into the cavity between the broken vertebrae and the neck.

Another Method

If the operator is too nervous or unable to manage this method, a simple way is to hang the bird up by the leg which are tied together with a piece of string, and to stick it with a sharp small knife in the jugular vein, behind the ear. Another way is to take the fowl by the legs, and with a short thick stick, strike a sharp blow across the back of the head. This causes instant insensibility and death. The flesh will become white if the bird is hung up afterwards by the legs.

No Food for 24 Hours

Before the fowls are killed they must have no food for twenty-four hours. If this is not done the food in the crop turns sour, the flesh becomes discolored, and the body quickly decomposes. If chickens are intended for the market the details of plucking and shaping must be carefully attended to. Some practice is necessary to enable the plucking to be done well. This can be accomplished more easily when the bird is warm, as the feathers then come out with little effort. Poultry that has been specially fattened and prepared for the table are tender and the skin tears quickly.

Carefully Packed

When fowls are sent to a poulterer they must be carefully packed in a flat basket or box, lined with clean straw, and the straw covered with white paper. The birds are placed breast downwards, close together, and packed tightly to prevent shaking about on the journey. The feathers should be sorted at the time of plucking. Those from ducks and geese are worth more than those from ordinary fowls, and white feathers are more valuable than colored ones.

Killing Ducks

Ducks are generally killed by a knife thrust through the roof of the mouth into the brain. A usual way of killing geese is to strike a smart blow at the back of the neck, and then to run a sharp pointed knife into the hollow at the junction of the head and neck. Turkeys are killed much in the same way as ducks, the wings being crossed to prevent struggling.

COLD STORAGE EGGS

Likely to Supplant Limeing and Other Preserving Processes

According to Dr. Bordas, of the French council of public hygiene, the cold storage of eggs is rapidly increasing in France, and will soon supplant limeing and the other processes now employed for preserving eggs. Dr. Bordas insists on maintaining a rigorous distinction between fresh eggs and cold storage eggs, although the latter are very superior to limed eggs. Five, six, or even seven months of cold storage do not appreciably alter the appearance or odor of eggs, while lime water, acting for a much shorter period, makes the albumen slightly yellow and gives the egg the characteristic odor of lime. An egg which has been kept three or four months in cold storage is still in perfect condition to be eaten, soft-boiled, from the shell, but a limed egg of the same age is unfit for this use. After the fourth month of cold storage the air space of the egg becomes enlarged by evaporation, but the egg is still perfectly fit for pastrymaking and most culinary uses.

FLOWER POTS

The value of flower pots depends on the uses to which put, their hardness, and ease with which handled, an dwhen not in use stored. Then it is so easy to obtain them in so many diverse sizes from three inches across the tops, to others 18 to 20 inches. As a rule the amateur gardener finds the most useful to be four-inch, five-inch and six-inch broad. It is well in purchasing to obtain pots in several sizes, as all, if not too large, are wanted for various descriptions of plants. It is well when using new pots to dip them in water for a moment and then let them stand to drain before using, as otherwise being so dry they are too absorbent. In the case of old pots all should be well scrubbed in hot soda water and dried before using. A dirty pot should never be used.

Get Rid of the Stock that is Not Paying Its Way

Too many men hold the opinion that most everything on their farms is just about right. Their teams keep a little fatter on less feed, yet do more work; their cows give just as much milk as anyone's else, and of higher butter-fat content; their sheep always raise more or larger lambs, and their sows the largest and evenest litters of the settlement. But, in truth, there is scarcely a farm throughout the land that is not carrying too large a proportion of deadweight live stock. The sensible thing to do now is to divest the problem of all sentiment, and in a business manner discard every animal that is not handsomely paying its way.

In most every man's group of calves are to be found some stunted ones that for one reason or another give promise of a slowly-gained, dwarfed maturity. They will never pay. As beef animals, they will eat their heads off; the females will never make desirable breeders or milkers. The thing to do is to hasten them off the place.

Likewise, in almost every herd of milch cows, there are cows that have not paid for the pasture they have used and the labor expended on them. They have deadheaded their way for a number of years, being kept, perhaps, because their dams or their granddams were what were then thought to be good cows. If records have been kept by use of the scales and Babcock tester, the owners have at hand a very ready source of reliable information upon which they can convict these poachers with perfect safety. As soon as these culls—these non producers—are located, fatten them up, and let the butcher have them.

And there are horses which have amply proven that they can neither do a draft horse's work day in and day out, nor a road horse's work at any time. Some of these have been kept for many a day. They are not good enough. They eat almost as much as the right kind of a horse, but never give satisfaction in harness. They are poor advertisements of your business acumen. If they are breed mares, they are still less desirable. Let the grocery man or the other city fellow have them; they can come nearer making good use of such horses than can farmers. Let them go, and, in place of three scrubs, get a pair of good (if possible, pure-bred) draft mares or other mares of the type preferred, study to use them rightly, and know by your own experience what you now believe is good practice.

Similarly can scrub brood sows and breeding sheep be located in every breeder's possession. Get rid of them; it seems costly to do so, but in reality it is an actual saving. One will be money ahead every time he discovers and discards an unprofitable animal. And that money can be put into profitable ones.—Farmer's Advocate.

PLOWING VS. DISCING

How the One Is Made to Assist the Other

Plowing and discing are two of the most essential features of soil cultivation. To dispense with the former would spell ruin for the farmer, while if the latter were abolished at the present day, the loss would be keenly felt in agricultural circles.

In order to keep the land free of weeds and to get the most out of the soil, it is necessary to periodically turn the top earth down and bring fresh soil to the surface. For this reason, the modern plow cutting strips of land, as yfrom ten to sixteen inches in width, according to the size of the plow, turns them completely over so that the under soil is exposed to the sun, and the weeds, if there are any, are completely buried.

That plowing should be well done is important, and there is no better proof of this than the comparison of farms that are accustomed to be well plowed with others that are poorly plowed. Plowing matches were organised not for the sport they afforded but that an improvement in the character of the work would result from the contests.

In the fall of the year, after the crop is harvested discing the land intended for fallow the ensuing season is a capital plan, and is regularly carried out by many farmers. The stirring up of the soil starts the weeds growing and forms a mulch which preserves the moisture. Early in the spring, as soon as the ground is dry enough for working, discing is again done to loosen the top soil and thus retain the moisture; placing the land in a good condition for plowing when the fallow season arrives.

As a cultivator for summerfallow, the disc has its merits and is widely used as it is a light machine, kills small weeds and aids in packing the soil.

Occasionally the disc is used in the spring to take the place of the plow. The stubble is sometimes burned off, and the land is disced to render it in shape for the crop. Under favorable conditions good crops have been taken off in the fall, but as a rule, this method is a failure and the farmer who practises this style of farming too frequently soon has his land polluted with weeds.

Only as a pulverizer and a cultivator has discing proved successful. When it is done in place of plowing the result is a failure. The disc will not take the place of the plow for the simple reason that it does not cut all the soil and does not go deep enough. —Grain Growers' Guide.

COMMENDABLE KINDNESS

The following incident actually occurred in the streets of Rochester. A man was leading a dog by a chain. The dog had a big bone in his mouth, and dropped it. He strained at the chain in the effort to recover his bone, but the man dragged him on relentlessly. A little ragged girl playing in the street observed the dog's difficulty, picked up the bone, ran after the dog, and restored to him his property.

THE SINGING MASTER

How Beckmann Was Rewarded Through a Pupil.

Having received his three francs, Seraphin Beckmann carefully put the money into his pocketbook, said goodbye to Mr. and Mrs. Steinacher, and left.

Once outside the house he turned up the collar of his overcoat, for it was cold and misty, pressed down his hat, for it was windy, dug his hands into his pockets and hurried homeward to his modest lodgings in St. Jacques St.

He stopped at the fruit dealer, the butcher and the baker, bought two eggs, two ounces of butter, a little cheese, a little bacon and a loaf of bread before he entered the dark hall of the tenement, where he lived on the top floor.

After closing his door he lit a candle and placed it on a table near the door. Then he took off his overcoat, put on his slippers, an old skull cap and a very threadbare coat, and went out into his little kitchen. He lit the fire, set the table for one, took a bottle of white wine from a cupboard, filled a decanter with cold water, fried his eggs and sat down to his modest supper.

When he had finished and cleared away the dishes, he went back into the front room.

A plain iron bedstead, covered with a red bedspread, stood opposite a small bureau, and these with a few rickety chairs and a plain table made up the whole furniture, except for an old piano, which had evidently seen better days.

For a while Beckmann sat at the piano singing the songs of the old masters he loved so dearly, then he undressed, put out the light and went to bed.

Seraphin Beckmann was sixty-five years old. In his youth he had been quite a familiar tenor, and had been heard in all the capitals of Europe, but he had never known how to take care of the money he earned, his purse had always been open to his friends, and now he was making a miserable living, giving singing lessons at three francs a lesson, but he was content and did not see any reason why he should complain of his fate in life.

To-day he felt even more happy than usual. His favorite pupil, Anna Steinacher, a girl from the same part of Alsace where he was born, was on the point of making her debut, and he felt that she was destined to become a great prima donna.

* * * * * * *

Anna Steinacher appeared at the Paris Opera. Her great beauty and exquisite voice won the hearts of the audience from the moment she entered the stage, and no one in the audience was more enthusiastic than her old singing master, who watched every movement from his seat in the last row of the gallery.

When the curtain had gone down for the last time under a storm of applause form the audience, he left the theatre happier than he had ever felt in his life.

To-night he took a 'bus instead of walking home, and soon found himself in his poor rooms feeling strangely lonesome and out of sorts at the thought that his life's work was over.

"I am hungry," he murmured half-aloud.

There was a knock at the door. Who could come to see him at this hour of the night? Evidently someone who had made a mistake. He opened the door.

Anna Steinacher, followed by her faithful maid, Gretchen! Anna, with a face beaming with happiness!

"It is I! Yes, it is really I! Why do you look at me so? I come to take supper with you. One must always have a good supper after a performance, and we are going to have all our old Alsacian dishes."

The young singer with tears of joy in her eyes, kissed her old teacher on both cheeks, and they both cried a little.

"Now, Gretchen, let us see what you have."

In a few moments the basket was emptied, the table set, the candles lit, the Rhine wine sparkling in the glasses, and master and pupil sat down to a veritable feast, as Beckmann had not seen for years.

"This is not going to be the last time we shall feast together, master, for you are to continue singing with me on the condition that I fix your salary."

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS
It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise oearning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

VOL XXXIV NO. 13 — PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO, TUESDAY JANUARY 17, 1911 — PRICE TWO CENTS

Police Commissioners in Session Yesterday

CHIEF CONSTABLE THOMPSON MAKES HIS FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

Recommends That Four Additional Men be Added to Police Force.

The Police Commissioners met last evening and received a very favorable report from Chief Thompson.

The following is taken from the report:

To the Chairman and members of the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Peterborough, Ont.,—

Gentlemen.—I have the honor to submit for your consideration and information, my annual report of the Police Department of the city of Peterborough for 1910.

I regret very much to report that we have on our calendar for the past year, one of the most serious charges known in the laws of our country, that of murder.

However, apart from the above mentioned charge, it is very gratifying to report that crime is on the decrease. We had, during the month of August, a number of shops and stores broken into, and I am pleased to say that we have to our credit, the conviction of the offender, who was sent to Kingston Penitentiary for seven years.

I also take this opportunity of complimenting and thanking the citizens of Peterborough for the kind assistance they have given the Police Department at all times during the year.

I also desire to thank the Board personally, for the courtesy that they have shown me since I have taken charge of the Department.

It is also desired by your Chief, to thank Chief Howard and his associates on the Peterborough Fire Department, for their willingness to assist the police at any time.

The number of cases summoned or apprehended during the year were 460 as against 519 in 1909.

The Chief also gave statistical reports showing the number of cases apprehended or summoned during the year 1910, and the disposition of the cases. The total amount of fines and costs collected in connection with the Police Court for the year 1910, and paid over to the City Treasurer was $1,221.50.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Chief Thompson recommended that four men be added to the police force this year, also that a sergeant and plain clothes man be appointed in connection with the department and that the Board consider the advisability of striking a scale of salaries for the department and that the men receive an increase of ten cents per day.

Moved by Mr. Dumble and seconded by Mr. Morrow that the report be referred to the whole Board.—Carried.

City Clerk Armstrong read a letter from the City Engineer, which had been referred to the Police Commissioners by the Board of Works, on the vandalism by youths on Hallowe'en. Moved by Mr. Morrow and seconded by Mr. Dumble that Mr. Armstrong acknowledge the letter and the matter of future preparations for Hallowe'en be left to the Chairman and Chief Thompson.

A request was read from Mr. Fienburg for a license to run a second-hand shop on Simcoe street.—Granted.

The Police Department requested a consolidation of the by-laws of the city. The matter was referred to City Clerk Armstrong and the City Solicitor.

The City Clerk is to place a request before the Finance Committee, that the City Treasurer be authorized to pay expenses directed by the Board.

The meeting then ahjourned, to meet again Monday, January 23.

OBITUARY.

Death of Ex-Mayor Best.

At one-thirty yesterday there passed away, one of the most highly respected and generally known citizens of Peterborough, in the person of Henry Best, ex-mayor of the city. Stricken with paralysis some months ago, the deceased mainfained a tenacious grasp on life, and although the news of his death was not entirely a surprise, still it will cause sincere and wide-spread feeling of regret.

The late Henry Best was the eldest son of the late Thomas Best, of Peterborough, and was born in Peterborough in 1836.

The deceased was one of the leading figures in the city municipal affairs, and rendered most valuable services to the city, both as councillor and mayor. He entered the council in 1892. He was a candidate in 1893, but was defeated. He was elected to the council the following year and occupied a seat on the Council Board until 1905, when he was made mayor and was Chief Magistrate of the City for 1905-6.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

GEORGE WILLIAM FITZGERALD.

The many friends of Mr. George Fitzgerald will regret to learn of his death, which occurred at his home, 174 London street, at 2.30 yesterday afternoon. Deceased was born in 1852 and haw had a career full of usefulness. He came to the city about

Annual Meeting of Shareholders of Little Lake Cemetery Company

THE REPORTS OF THE VARIOUS OFFICERS WERE RECEIVED AND ADOPTED AS READ.

Everything in a Very Satisfactory Condition—Vote of Thanks Tendered to Superintendent Wise.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of Little Lake Cemetery Co. yesterday, the reports from the different officers made a creditable showing and the company is in good standing.

After the minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted, the directors' report was made. Among the repairs last year a new vault was made under the chapel, which is much better and more up to date than the old one. The walls of the chapel were repaired and the interior fixed.

The Cemetery was as attractive last year as in any previous year. In reference to Mr. James Stevenson's death, the report read as follows:—

Your directors have to record with deepest regret the recent loss of one of their number, namely, Mr. James Stevenson, who had been a member of the board for nearly thirty-six years, and its president for a number of terms, and who always took a deep and active interest in everything affecting the improvement of the grounds, and whose good judgment is apparent in many ways in the cemetery, and in the financial condition in which the company now stands.

The following report from the Superintendent was read and adopted:

Receipts	$5,338.15
Outstanding Accounts	2,271.80
Expenditure for labor at Cemetery	3,555.13
Balance of Income over Labor Expenditure	1,783.02

Peterborough, Jan. 16, 1911.

To the President, Directors and Shareholders of The Little Lake Cemetery Company,—

Gentlemen.—Another year of work in your Cemetery has closed and I beg to report upon the progress made.

Owing to the old Receiving Vault and Chapel (two separate buildings) requiring considerable repairs, your Directors resolved that one good building would be better than two separate ones, therefore, the old Receiving Vault was torn down and an excavation made beneath the Chapel and a new vault built at a cost of about $865. The combining of these two buildings will be found very convenient, as the funeral service and the disposal of the remains can be accomplished under one roof. The ground where the old vault stood comprising about 1,400 superficial feet will make excellent burial plots This ground, which is centrally situated and in a very desirable locality, has already been graded and is now for sale.

I graded and seeded another large block in section "O" situated in the eastern part of the cemetery. It will be found necessary in the near future to open this section for burials, as this class of lots are all sold.

A concrete curb has been placed around a triangular plot in the north end of the cemetery, giving it a very neat appearance. I would advise that this permanent work be continued where necessary, as it not only adds to the appearance of the cemetery, but lessens the labor required to keep the roads and banks in condition.

Extensions have been made to the water system where found necessary, and all the taps that were leaking were replaced with new ones. A new concrete wall to replace the old wooden one was built along the north side of the old greenhouse, a cellar built and a new furnace installed to heat the greenhouse. We are now in better condition than ever to supply the lot owners with the plants and flowers they require for their plots.

The number of lot owners taking special interest in their lots is still on the increase, and it is gratifying to know that a general satisfaction of the care taken of them is continually expressed, and orders for discontinuance of work through not having obtained a satisfactory results is practically nil. Trusting that this work will still continue to increase, I am,

Your obedient servant,
F. WISE,
Superintendent.

HOCKEY.

Pill Pounders Defeated Lock Works Last Night.

In a poor exhibition of hockey last night, the Pill Pounders beat the Lock Works team 6—1. The Pill Pounders were much smaller, but their combination rushes helped them out. The Lock Works lacked combination, but were not afraid to use their extra weight. About the middle of the second half, a couple of players started to fight and the crowd surged onto the ice with the result that there was a free-for-all. Two men from each side went off for the remainder of the game.

The line-ups were as follows:

—Pill Pounders—
Goal—Macafee.
Point—Thompson.

Rover—Halpin.
Centre—Patterson.
R. Wing—White.

POACHING BY AMERICANS.

The attention of Mr. Clifford Sifton and the Conservation Commission is drawn to this paragraph from the president's remarks at the annual meeting of the Canadian Bank of Commerce: "In halibat fishing we own another great source of wealth, but we regret to have to repeat that nothing of much practical value is being done to stop the extensive poaching by Americans. If by indifference or because of the difficulty of making Governments believe that vigorous action is necessary, we are robbed of the value of this natural asset, the damage to Canada will be incalculable. Deep sea fishing is our opportunity to build up on the Pacific coast communities of white fishermen without which we shall suffer as a nation in a much more serious manner than from the mere loss of money. Capital in a large way awaits the development of Pacific Coast fishing. Markets exist in our own country, and halibut and herring fishing if protected will exceed the great salmon industry in value. Shall we preserve our rights?"

Preliminary Tankard Games Start Today

The preliminary tankard opens at 9.30. The rinks coming together today are:

9.30—Port Hope vs. Campbellford.
1.30—Lindsay plays winners.
Peterborough plays Cannington.

CARETAKER FOR THE ISOLATION HOSPITAL NOT YET APPOINTED

QUALIFICATIONS OF ONE APPLICANT TO BE ENQUIRED INTO.

New Chairs for Public Library Not Satisfactory—Ice House for Isolation Hospital to be Built.

The new City Property Committee for nineteen hundred and eleven met in its first business session last night. There were present Mayor Morrow, Chairman, Ald. Geo. Duncan, Aldermen Morgan, Bradburn and Brown.

Mr. E. J. Hickey, of Bethune St., asked permission to pile stone on the Corporation's lot at the corner of Stewart and Murray streets, until July 15th. No action taken. The city is going to clean this lot up in the spring.

Sixteenteenders for the position of caretaker of the Isolation Hospital were received. No action was taken on two applications that came to hand after advertised date for receiving same, December 27th.

Some of the applicants were on the funny side. For instance, one specified as a qualification that he is a member of the T.A.S., while another drew attention to his being a member of the Protestant Federation.

This matter was left in abeyance, the chairman being given authority to enquire into the qualifications of one applicant, and report back to committee in one week.

CHAIRS NOT SATISFACTORY.

Moved by Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the Library Bureau Co. be notified that the chairs furnished them for the public library arrived here in bad condition, and are not of the same quality as the chairman saw in Toronto and approved of, and that they are here subject to the company's order and at their own risk. Also that the book stacks, are not finished as the agent represented they would be—Carried.

BLIND FOR LIBRARY.

The chairman reported that he has accepted the lowest tender for furnishing the library with blinds—that of A. W. Crossman, at $52.75. At subsequent meeting of the Council Ald. Duncan was authorized to secure these blinds at his own discretion.

The chairman was authorized to have an ice house built, and to arrange for having ice drawn thereto.

TO CLEAN WINDOWS.

Architect Blackwell will be notified to see that all windows in the Isolation Hospital are cleaned by contractor, according to specifications.

The chairman was authorized to purchase blinds for the hospital.

SANITARY INSPECTOR.

The committee will recommend Council that a Sanitary Inspector be appointed. And that Council authorize the committee to move such appointment.

ELECTRIC POWER WANTED.

The chairman was authorized to enquire into the question of securing power for electric light at the Isolation Hospital, and report back to the committee.

WEIGHING OF COAL.

Ald. Brown suggested that coal dealers pay for all coal they have weighed on the market scales.

Ald. Bradburn—"Then they won't weigh on the market scales at all. In any event the consumer would eventually pay for this weighing. If any action at all is taken in this direction it should be made compulsory that ALL coal be weighed on the market scales."

It was decided to take no action in this matter. The present by-law provides that when coal is ordered at market weight, it can be weighed on the market scales free of charge. The police are also empowered to stop any coal rig and have its contents weighed before delivered.

Library Board Wants $1,000 For New Books

Messrs. E. H. D. Hall, T. F. Matthews and Duncan Walker interviewed the City Property Committee last night with a view to getting a grant of $1000 with which to purchase new books for the Public Library. Mr. Hall pointed out that it would take $1000 to put the Library in good shape in regard to books.

A Place of Entertainment for Young Men

"Old Twilight," who is one of the characters made familiar to Star readers by that widely read favorite The Khan, finds fault with the closing of the only bar in "Gumbo," on the ground that the bar in question was an appendage to a hotel, and that the abolition of the appendage has been followed by the boarding up of the hotel windows. He contends that some sort of a place of entertainment should be kept open, even if it has to be financed by the municipality itself. He suggests that the local optimists might form a joint stock company and carry on a barless roadhouse. The young men must have some where to go, and if one dollar, 'er ten dollars, 'er a thousand dollars, will save a boy, why not plank it down? They are cheap at that—why, they're bargains."

There is something in what the Khan says. The danger of local option is that communities may lose sight of the necessity of providing places of accommodation for the travelling public and of entertainment for the young men. The great question as to "where shall the hired man wash his feet?" is supplemented by a query as to where he shall spend his evenings. A warm, firei a comfortable well-lit room, something to read, and, more than that, the company of his fellow-beings, are conditions which appeal to the average man in the smaller centres where artificial means of entertainment are lacking. The profits of any a bar have been built up on the foundation. Many of those who have frequented such places have gone there to satisfy a craving for society, and have at first patronized the liquid refreshments as a matter of duty rather than desire.

Ontario municipalities which "banish the bar" should feel it equally their duty to replace it by some institution which retains the hospitable features of the hotel. Such a need is not met by a boarding-house. There must be a place of public intercourse which will cater to the men of the community as well as strangers. As the Khan suggests, it should not be an expensive proposition to finance an institution in smaller places. As free from class and creed distinction as a bar-room, as attractive in its warmth and social fellowship, the public room of the temperance hotel has a duty to perform which municipalities and governments cannot afford to overlook. The Feeders of New England

The men who supply New England with food are the Wholesale Grocers.

Last Autumn 76 of them went on an excursion and after returning home sent us a testimonial that is very highly esteemed. Many of these famous firms have been selling our products for 12 to 15 years, but have not heretofore inspected the pure food works.

To The Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.,
Battle Creek, Michigan,

Greeting:

We, the undersigned Wholesale Grocers of New England, desire to express our thanks and appreciation for the courtesy, hospitalities and entertainment offered to us during our recent brief visit to Battle Creek.

We were more than pleased and gratified at the methods, cleanliness and extent of your works, in the production of the food products—Postum Cereal, Post Toasties and Grape-Nuts. We need not speak of their world-wide reputation and health-giving qualities, for that is already established by their popularity.

"There's a Reason"

We assure you of our hearty co-operation in your behalf and our best wishes for your continued success.

RITES OF VOODOOISM

Human Sacrifices to a Snake-God Not Common in Haiti

A secret religious sect, worshipping a god known as Voodoo, the Snake God, and which offers up human sacrifices, is again showing signs of vitality in Haiti. The matter has been brought to the notice of the German authorities by the inspector of police who had made a thorough investigation.

The following summary of the report is published in the Cologne Gazette, and from this it would appear that a woman, who is now in prison in the capital awaiting trial was directly responsible for the killing and eating of five children.

In her house I found a barrel containing pickled human flesh, the remains of a child aged about twelve. It is, unfortunately, well known that the Voodoo faith has still many adherents.

The priests of the cult are all-powerful, and the sacrifices are usually animals, but occasionally, as in the present instance, young children are immolated. The god himself takes the form of a snake, and his mouthpiece is a priest, who is assisted by a priestess.

Estels Liberia, the young woman concerned in the present affair, was at the time high priestess of the cult. At the great ceremony in honor of the snake-god the high priest and priestess sit on a double throne, the woman being clothed in nothing but a gorgeous girdle. Worshippers of both sexes attend with red cloths round their loins. On an altar stands a wooden box containing the snake, which is brought from its box and worshipped by all present, gifts being placed on the altar while the populace prays for the fulfilment of some great public desire.

Then begins a wild dance, headed by the chief priestess, who discards her girdle as the dancing grows more furious, and a halt is not called until the people begin to fall exhausted to the ground. If any misfortune has befallen the people a sacrifice is offered to the god.

It was on one of these occasions that Estels Liberia insisted on the sacrifice of a human victim, and, in concert with a man named Conso Pelle, decided to kidnap a girl, a niece of Conso. The child's mother was enticed away, and on her return was informed that the chief priestess had called on her daughter. The mother seemed greatly honored, and a special ceremony was immediately arranged.

When all were assembled, the girl was fetched from her hiding-place, laid in front of the altar, and strangled by her uncle. Her head was cut off, and all those present drank some of the blood, which was collected in a bowl. The flesh was subsequently cooked at Conzo's house, and instead of being eaten, as had formerly been customary, was preserved.

Two girls who had overlooked the cooking of the flesh were declared to have offended the god, and these, too, were then similarly sacrificed, their deaths being followed by two more a few days later.

DADDY'S CALLING

Daddy is calling, calling his sonny:
But, though I love him, I'm not, as you see.
Anxious to answer: I know it sounds funny,
'Cause I know Daddy has something for me.

Yes, it is naughty to seem so unwilling;
Boys ought to answer their Daddies with glee.
But I'd much rather that someone was filling
Daddy's kind thoughts at this moment but me.

Why don't I go, when he softly calls "Freddy!"
Waiting to take me, I know, on his knee?
Well, it's just this—with his slipper all ready,
Daddy is anxiously waiting for me!

CLOVER IS KING

Napoleon Carron brought to the Chatham market a load of clover seed which weighed up to 5,220 lbs., making 87 and a fraction bushels. He was paid $7 a bushel for the seed, and the cheque which he received for the whole load was made out for $620.0[illegible]

THE RED YEAR

LOUIS TRACY.

Mr. Mayne threw down a bundle of clothes he was carrying. He unslung his rifle. His face, tanned by exposure to sun and rain, lost some of its brick red color.

"Are you sure?" he whispered, as if their voices might betray them. Like every other man in the garrison he longed to check the career of "Bob the Nailer."

"It is too late," said the girl. "He was visible only for an instant. Look! I saw him at that window."

She partly opened the wooden shutter again and pointed to an upper story of the opposite building. Almost instantly a bullet imbedded itself in the solid planks. Some watcher had noted the opportunity and taken it. Winifred coolly closed the casement and adjusted its cross-bar.

"Perhaps it is just as well you missed the chance," she said. "You might have been shot yourself while you were taking aim."

"And what about you, my lady?"

"I shan't offend again, uncle, dear. I really could not tell you why I looked out just now. Things were quiet, I suppose. And I forgot that the opening of a window would attract attention. But why in the world are you bringing me portions of Mr. Malcolm's uniform? That is what you have in the bundle, is it not?"

"Yes. The three men who shared his room are dead, and the place is wanted as an extra ward. I happened to hear of it, so I have rescued his belongings."

"Do you—do you think he will ever claim them, or that we shall live to safeguard them?"

"My dear one, that is as Providence directs. It is something to be thankful for that we are alive and uninjured. And that reminds me. They need a lot of bandages in the hospital. Will you tear Malcolm's linen into strips? I will come for them after the last post."

He hurried away, leaving the odd collection of garments with her. The clothes were her lover's parade uniform, which Malcolm had carried from Meerut in a valise strapped behind the saddle. The other articles were purchased in Lucknow and had never been worn. In comparison with the smart full-dress kit of a cavalry officer and the spotless linen, a soiled and mud-spattered turban looked singularly out of place. It was as though some tatterdemalion had thrust himself into a gathering of dandies.

Being a woman, Winifred gave no heed to the fact that the metal badge on the crossed folds was not that worn by an officer, nor did she observe that it carried the crest of the 2nd Cavalry, whereas Malcolm's regiment was the 3rd. But, being also a very thrifty and industrious little person, she decided to untie the turban, wash it, and use its many yards of fine muslin for the manufacture of lint.

The folds of a turban are usually kept in position by pins, but when she came to examine this one she discovered that it was tied with whip-cord. Her knowledge of native headgear was not extensive, so this measure of extra security did not surprise her. A pair of scissors soon overcame the difficulty; she shook out the neat folds, and a pearl necklace and a piece of paper fell to the floor.

She was alone in her room at the moment. No one heard her cry of surprise, almost of terror. One glance at the glistening pearls told her that they were of exceeding value. They ranged from the size of a small pea to that of a large marble; their white sheen and velvet purity bespoke rareness and skilled selection. The setting alone would vouch for their quality. Each pearl was secured to its neighbor by clasps and links of gold, which a brooch-like fastening in front was studded with fine diamonds. Winifred sank to her knees. She picked up this remarkable ornament as gingerly as if she were handling a dead snake. In the vivid light the pearls shimmered with wonderful and ever-changing tints. They seemed to whisper of love and hate—of all the passions that stir heart and brain into frenzy—and through a mist of fear and awed questioning came a doubt, a suspicion, a searching of her soul as she recalled certain things which the thrilling events of her recent life had dulled almost to extinction.

Her uncle had told her of the Princess Roshinara's words to Malcolm on that memorable night of May 10, when he rode out from Meerut to help them. At the time, perhaps, a little pang of jealousy made its presence felt for no woman can bear to hear of another woman's overtures to her lover. The meeting at Bithour helped to dispel that half-formed illusion, and she has not troubled since to ask herself why the Princess Roshinara was so ready to help Malcolm to escape. She never dreamed that she herself was a pawn in the game that was intended to bring Nana Sahib to Delhi. But now, with this royal trinket glittering in her hands, she could hardly fail to connect it with the only Indian princess of whom she had any knowledge, and the torturing fact was seemingly undeniable that Malcolm had this priceless necklace in his possession without telling her of its existence. Certainly he had chosen a singular hiding-place, and never did man treat such a treasure with such apparent carelessness. But—there it was. The studied simplicity of its concealment had been effective. She had heard, long since, how he parted from Lawrence on the Chinhut road. Since that hour there was no possible means of communicating with Lucknow, even though he had reached Allahabad safely.

And he had never told her a word about it. It was that that rankled. Poor Winifred rose from her knees in a mood perilously akin to hatred of the negro who dealt death or disablement to her friends of the garrison, but, this time, it was a woman, not a man, whom she regarded as the enemy.

Then, in a bitter temper, she stooped again to rescue the bit of discolored paper that had fallen with the pearls. Her anger was not lessened by finding that it was covered with Hindustani characters. They, of course, offered her no clue to the solution of the mystery that was wringing her heartstrings. If anything, the illegible scrawl only added to her distress. The document was something unknown; therefore, it lent itself to distrust.

At any rate, the turban was destined not to be shredded into lint that day.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

Is a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When It is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. J. W. Hurst, organizer for the Canada Weather Insurance Company, is in the city in connection with the business of the company.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

THE MOTHER'S HOUR

By Ada Patterson

In a large mercantile establishment in London, a sorely needed institution called "The Silence Room" has been installed. Out of this room came a small British matron, her face flushed to the purple red of newly crushed grapes, her spirits in as nearly a state of perturbation as the British matron ever permits herself to reach. Conveyed by her were four middle-aged, middle-class matrons like herself, square of figure and stolid of face. Straight to the bureau of information went the small matron, followed by four large ones.

"I want to know," she inquired, "whether you don't have to keep silence in the silence room. I have told these women so, but they won't believe it. They were talking in there and I told them I couldn't stand it, and I can't."

"You were quite right, madame," replied the bureau of information in the person of a trig young woman with alert eyes. "That room is reserved for absolute silence."

"That's what I told these women," returned the flushed matron. "I said 'I come here every afternoon to get what I can't have in my own home—an hour of peace and quiet, all to myself.'"

The indignant little woman expressed openly and publicly what every woman of busy life has cried out in her heart. "An hour of peace and quietness all to myself," is one of the chiefest needs of a woman. "The Children's Hour" is recognized in the busy life of the busiest household. The hour is given over wholly and unquestionably to the children. One of the greatest American editors told me that he might miss a morning engagement with his publishers or with a coveted contributor but nothing less than a fatal railway wreck could make him forego the "Children's Hour."

"It is from five to six," he said, "and my wife and I always visit the little ones in the nursery at that time, romp with them, tell them stories, and chat with them while they eat their supper. When we have left the little ones tucked into bed we go to our own dinner, refreshed by the 'Children's Hour,' fifty minutes that have washed away the sordid dust of the day."

The children need this hour. The parents need it. But the mother's day has been without its need and its meed if she has not had her hour of a liberal fraction of an hour in peace and quiet.

The Silence Room to whose invasion by chattering sounds she so strenuously objected, is a small oasis of quiet in a sea of noise. Outside the multiple noise of the greatest city in the world beats against the building as the waves of the sea beat against a rock. Within the little room is silence—silence not comparative but absolute. It is a square room whose colors are those of the "peace and quiet" of the matron's craving. The wainscoting is of slate-colored wood. The walls are of a light grey. The full-length windows doubled to deaden the street sounds are draped with creamy silk through which the afternoon sunshine pours softened rays. The chairs are broad, low-seated and inviting. There is a willow lounge with a rose-colored screen before it—the quietest corner of this quiet room.

A glance at the face of a woman shows whether she enjoys the quiet or whether existence is but for her a continual performance of noise and interruption, that ends only in noise and sleep. Alienists say that the majority of women who fill our insane asylums are farmers' wives and others who lead what the great man, who knew well the map of the human mind, call monotonous lives.

But, despite their monotony, they are busy, crowded, noisy lives; where the shriek of children and the chirrup of ever recurring demands, minute by minute, are in their ears. A silence room or a silent hour would diminish the number of tired faces with abnormally bright eyes and premature grey hairs, the faces of women distraught, that we see in those melancholy institutions.

Every woman should claim such an hour as her right. If her life is an indoor one, her hour alone may be a walk in quiet streets or in the country. If her life is pressed close with stratum upon stratum of practical duty, the hour might be spent in her own room with a book to her taste. If she chooses it might be spent at the piano with the music she loves. If she is physically worn it should be spent in her darkened bed-chamber upon a lounge or a bed, her eyes closed, her garments loose, the muscles that have been stretched to painful tension, for these blessed sixty minutes relaxed.

But however she spends it for her bodily or mental refreshment, a silent hour is her right. Every tired woman should insist upon the "Mother's Hour."

FIGHTING FOR ENGLAND.

King George II. liked to talk about his sailor men and soldier men, for they won lots of battles for him. And in one of these battles two soldier officers and three soldier men were fighting boldly against the enemy when they were told by another soldier officer, who was commander over them, to come back out of the battle.

One of the soldier officers did as he was told, but the other soldier officer would not, and he went on boldly fighting the enemy.

Now, every soldier man and soldier officer has to obey orders, so when the battle was over the commanding officer sent for the soldier officer who had gone on fighting and told him that he would not let him fight any more because he had not obeyed orders. But the soldier officer had a good friend to stick up for him, and that friend was no other than King George.

For when some men asked King George to sign a paper so that the soldier officer would not be allowed to fight any more for England in a battle, King George would not do so. "No, no!" he said, "he fought, and he was right! The other ran away, and he was wrong!"

And whatever was said to him, King George would not sign the paper. So the brave soldier officer still went on fighting for England. Are you not glad that King George let him do so?

A BRAVE LITTLE LASSIE.

This story is about a brave little lassie who lived in Australia, which is right on the other side of the world. She was only fourteen years old, and her father was a fisherman, and he lived on a little island with his wife and their eight children.

No one else lived on the island, and no one could come to their shore if they came in a boat.

The fisherman had a boat of his own of course, and he went out in it to catch fish. One day the fisherman was going to sail across the water to a place where some other people lived, and he took his wife and two of his children with him, as he thought they would like a sail in the boat.

The other six children were left on the island, and the oldest of them was the brave little lassie, only fourteen years old, and she had to look after the others till father and mother came back.

But, alas! father and mother never did come back, for the boat was upset into the sea, and they were drowned. And the two children with them were drowned, too. Just think how dreadful it was for the poor children left on the island, for no one knew that they were now all alone.

But the brave little lassie cared for her brothers and sisters just like the mother did, and when all the bread and flour was done, she even caught a sheep and killed it! And they were living on that, cooking it over a fire of wood, when another fisherman happened to come sailing up in his boat and took the poor children away with him, and kind friends looked after them.

EDITOR AND POET

By Robert Todd

A slim, neatly-dressed young man, carrying a small parcel under his arm, stood in the hallway on the tenth floor of the Lincoln Building. On the upper part of the door in front of him, painted in nice gold letters, were the words: "The Up-to-Date Magazine, Editorial Department. Walk in."

After regarding the words on the door for a few moments, the young man slowly turned the knob and stepped into the office. Before him, sitting at a desk, was an elderly, bald-headed man.

"Good day, sir," said the elderly one, genially. "What can I do for you?"

"Is the—the—editor in?" stammered the young man.

"Yes. I am the editor."

"My name is Percival Grieve. I have brought a few poems—"

"Poems?" exclaimed the editor "Just what I'm looking for. Let me see them."

Tremblingly Percival removed the cover of the parcel and handed the neat, white manuscripts to the editor.

"Thank you," said the editor fervently. "Ah, what's this? 'A Song of Love.' Great. And this? 'My Lady's Hair.' Splendid! My boy, you've got Kipling beat to a finish, and Byron and Tennyson and Wordsworth and Shakespeare, and all that bunch of dead ones couldn't write anything as good as this—ah, what d'ye call it?—oh, yes. 'A Dream on the Sea,'—to save their blooming lives.

'My love when I'm upon the seas,
'I dream we're in the garden plucking bees—or—'picking peas.'

Beautiful. The best ever! so daintily expressed. Promise me you won't write for any magazine but the "Up-to-Date." We'll pay you bigger prices than all the other magazines combined."

His voice quavering with joy, Percival promised.

"Thanks, my boy," said the editor, with tears in his eyes. "You'll never regret it. This little poem, 'Root Hog or Fly'—I mean 'Die,' will make 'em all sit up and take notice, you can bet your sweet life! My money for you, Percival. You're the candy boy!"

Digging into his pocket, the editor pulled out his wallet and tossed it to the poet.

"There is a little to start with," he said. "Come around in the morning and we'll settle up things to suit everybody. Good-bye until the morning, and don't let any of those other magazine sharps see any of those dainty little poems. We want 'em all."

Percival left the office so overjoyed that he could not tell whether he was walking on his hands or his feet. When he reached his little hall bedroom he examined the wallet. It contained two hundred dollars!

At ten o'clock the following morning Percival walked into the editorial office of the Up-to-Date Magazine. The editor was sitting at his desk—but was this the man whom he had seen yesterday? This angry-faced, stormy-eyed, bullet-headed man, who was rummaging through the piles of MSS. on his desk, and saying things. He glared at Percival.

"What do you want," he snapped.

"I'm a—a—poet," Percival stammered.

"A poet,' bawled the editor. "Why don't you go to work. We don't use poetry."

"But you said yesterday—"

"I said yesterday? What did I say yesterday?"

"You said my poetry was as good as Kipling's."

For a full minute the editor glared at him.

"I said your poetry was as good as Kipling's," he repeated. "Why, you fool, you must be crazy. I never saw any of your poetry."

"There it is on your desk, now," said Percy.

The editor took up the MS. and glanced over it.

"I said this was as good as Kipling's, did I?" he said. "Well, I must have been drunk. Why, in all my experience as an editor I have never seen anything so fierce. If I couldn't write better poetry than that I'd go away somewhere and die. My boy, take an old man's advice. Get a job in a daily house and read that stuff to the violent ones.

Percival was almost crying. "But you gave me this wallet as part payment," he said.

"What!" screamed the editor. Hurling himself upon the poet, he wrested the wallet from him

"I gave you this, did I?" panted the editor, rapturously kissing the wallet. "Well, I will take it back again. I certainly must have been loosey. This happened yesterday, you say."

"Yes, yesterday afternoon."

"Ah, I begin to smell a mouse. Smith has been dabbling in hypnotism lately, and he was in here yesterday afternoon, and he—well, just wait till I see him."

"But how about my poetry?" asked Percy.

"Take your poetry to Hades, and don't, please don't call that monk poetry or they will need an ambulance to cart it away."

The editor stopped, being out of breath. As he looked into the watery eyes of the poetic one he was touched.

"Look here," he said. "I'll take that album of yours that runs, 'My love, when I'm upon the seas I dream we're in the garden picking fleas—peas.' But it will be run amongst the whizbang ads. Here's a ten for it."

Percival took the money, gathered up his poems and slowly left the office of the Up-to-Date Magazine, wondering why God made such hard-hearted men as editors.—The Canadian Country.

102 YEARS OF AGE

Robert Cole, living at Croydon, will be 102 years old next Christmas. He was born at Canterbury, and he served in the old 69th Regiment. As Officer's servant in the Crimea, he had seven consecutive masters killed in action. His wife is over ninety years of age. Cole is a non-smoker. The King has sent a letter to Mrs. Burke, of The Lodge, St. Lawrence, Isle of Wight, congratulating her on having attained her 103rd Birthday.

JUGGLING WITH HER LIFE

A Woman's Desperate Method of Frightening Husband

Desperate measures were taken by Rhoda Hall, Halifax, England, to fright en her husband. Stealing a candle burning in a cellar window, P. C. Stevenson stopped on his beat shortly after midnight, and peered down into the basement. In the dim light he could see a woman in the cellar with a cord round her neck, suspended from a washing machine. She was shouting, "John," and her husband then appeared at the bottom of the cellar steps, and with a knife cut her down. The constable knocked at the door, and asked what the woman had been trying to do. She told him that her husband had threatened to leave her and that she had pretended to hang herself to frighten him. At the police court, Mrs. Wade was charged with attempting to commit suicide, and she was discharged on promising not to be so foolish again.

STRUCK A LION

Fulton Entered a Cage Where There Were Five Cubs

Some little excitement was created among visitors to Bostock and Wombwell's menagerie, located in Allen Public Park, by a local publican, named William Fulton, entering alone a cage containing five ferocious lion cubs. One of the animals came forward and Fulton smacked it on the nose with his hand, and it retreated. He remained inside about five minutes and was loudly cheered when he stepped from the cage.

WROUGHT BY A HAMMER-HEAD

A few years ago when I was turning in some works in Sheffield, says H. Batchelor, I happened to be centering a bar of steel to put into my lathe, when my hammer head broke across the eye where the shaft fits through. One half remained on the shaft, and the other went flying into the air. Suddenly there was an awful trembling and bumping higher up the shop, and a great face-plate cracked, and let a large ingot, weighing about thirty tons, fall out. My hammer head had fallen into the gearing, broken all the teeth in the cogs, and split the face-plate. I expected I should be discharged, but they said it was marvelous that no one was killed.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

The woman in charge of the Pickle Lane post-office was strongly suspected of tampering with the packages and parcels entrusted to her care.

One day a rosy-cheeked youngster entered the post-office and carefully laid upon the counter a huge slice of rich iced cake.

"With my sister, the bride's, compliments," he said; "and will yer please to eat as much as yer possibly can?"

The post-mistress smiled delightedly.

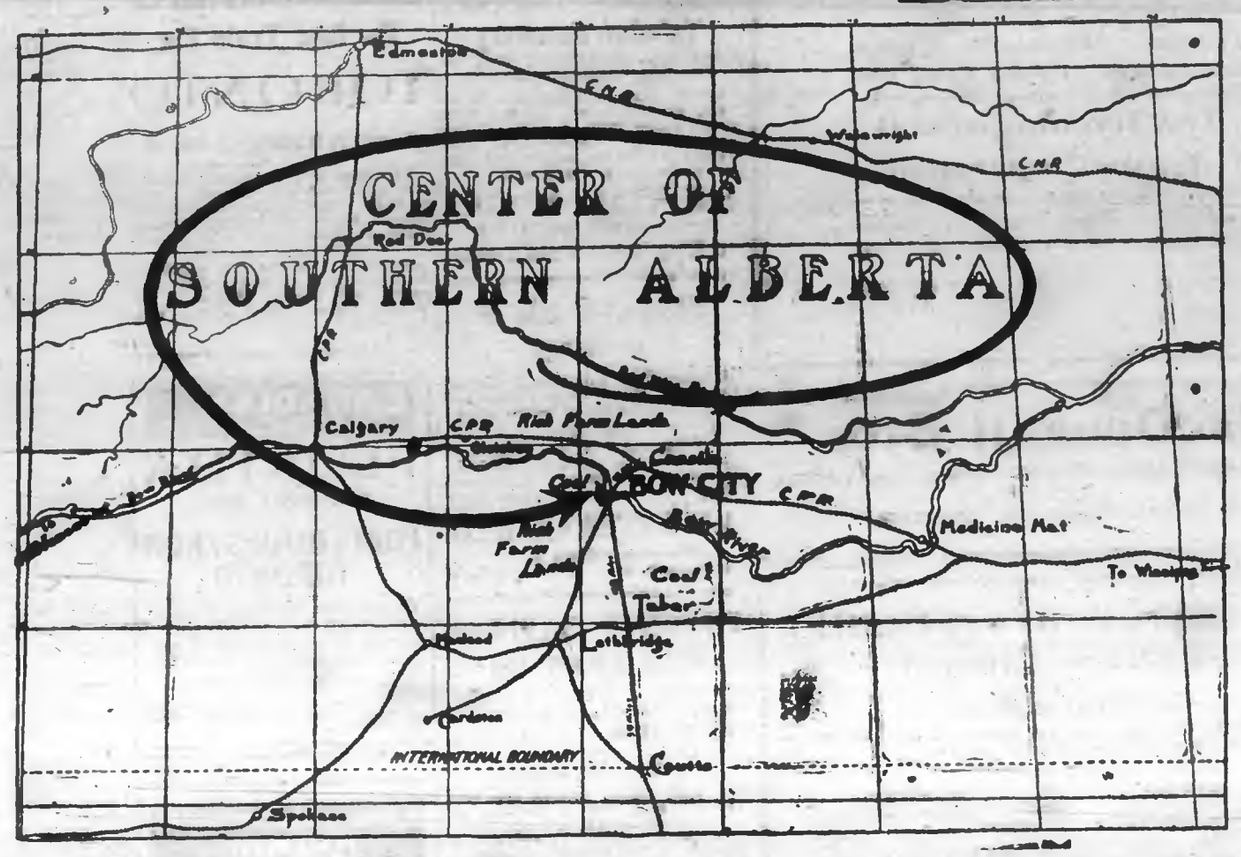
"How very kind of the bride to remember me!" she cried. "Did she know I have a special weakness for wedding-cake?"

"She did that!" coldly replied the youngster. "And she thought she'd send yer a bit of it this afternoon, just to take the edge off yer appetite before she posted any boxes to her friends!"

SOME RAPID TRAVELLING

Some folk seem to have all the luck. A man who was discharged from prison the other morning was married during the course of the afternoon, arrested during the course of the evening, and has now been sentenced to twenty-one months' imprisonment.

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"



If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor price.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when
"he comes of age that lot will be worth consid"erable money and will provide a handsome
"stake for him in life; it is at least most sub"stantial life insurance—sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Albert has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid—a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no license shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your apulication by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayniete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinal twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The distrist is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quarts pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quarts of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Kloudyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

FEEDING OF FOWL IMPORTANT DETAIL

How Daily Grain Rations are Fed by Most Successful Poultry Raisers —Time of day

It is the practice of a large percentage of the most successful poultrymen to feed a part of the daily grain ration ground. Most of them feed the grain moistened with either milk or water, although some feed it dry. A fowl's gizzard is capable of grinding all kinds of grain, but it is generally considered to be more economical to have a part of the grinding done by steam or water power. The soft feed idea, however, must not be overworked. A beginner often reasons that it is cheaper for the miller than for the fowl to grind the grain; but the powerful muscles of the gizzard are there to be used, and experience has shown that the balance of power of functions in the fowl's economy makes the vigorous exercise of the gizzard beneficial. When feeding moistened ground feed have it a comparatively dry, crumbly mash, and not a thin slop. Give what they will eat readily in 15 or 20 minutes.

Poultrymen do not agree as to the time of day when the soft feed should be fed. Some assert that it should be fed in the morning, others at noon, and still others at night. The greater proportion give the ground feed in the morning, a large number at night, and a few feed at noon. The number who feed at noon, however, is becoming larger. Those who give the soft feed in the morning reason that the fowls which have been on the perches during the night have largely digested the feed consumed the day before, and consequently have comparatively empty crops and digestive organs, and in order that the morning meal may be easily and quickly digested the fowls should be fed only ground and moistened feed. Other careful feeders state that if a moistened mash is fed in the morning the hen is likely to become gorged with feed early in the morning and take to the roost for the remainder of the day. It is probably more important that a part of the grain should be ground than that it should be fed at any particular time of day. In an experiment in West Virginia the egg production was practically the same whether mash was fed in the morning or at night.

HUSBANDS AND WIVES

They Should Learn to Control Their Tempers

Married couples should learn to control their tempers. Giving way to impatience and hasty words has destroyed the peace of many a home.

A husband always likes to see his wife looking neat, fresh and tidy. Nothing jars upon a man more than to observe that his wife is getting into slovenly habits.

A husband makes a wife unhappy when she thinks he is getting careless in the little demonstrations of affection which were so familiar in the courting days. Let him keep them up by all means, and he should remember that his wife likes to be consulted on matters of interest to himself.

A wife will do well to study her husband's moods. If he is moody or depressed let her cheer him up; if he is irritable, he must be soothed; if he is impatient, he must be borne with, not crossed. "Answering back" is not the way that makes for domestic happiness. It is harmony, love, sympathy, and mutual forbearance that brings true joy into a home.

MEAT FOR FOWLS

Hens eat meat, and any amount of it. Indeed, they must have this to keep them in good health. It makes them lay in winter. In other months they gather this quite readily in the form of insect life. Fresh lean meat from bones or as liver, etc., from the butcher's is the form to give them. Fatty tit-bits of any kind with meaty scraps of any sort should be given now and again. Green cut bone is another and very good form for this. Then skim milk if liberally fed to fowls will take the place for a time of meat. But it must be noted that this milk has only a tenth part of the meat properties, and consequently ten times more of it is required. Both meat and milk may be given with every advantage.

HAPPIEST MAN ON EARTH

The Zulu in the estate to which he is born and reared has been rightly said to be "the happiest man on God's earth," and although civilization is a blessed thing, it often seems altogether anomalous to attempt to apply it to the "native" or "Kaffir"—as he is commonly but erroneously termed. The Zulus, as a race, were, in the days of Chaka, Dingaan, and Cetewayo, an example to the world—aye, even to the staunchest Christian—in the morality of their living. They had to be, for the one and only alternative was death; and everybody knew and recognized this summary administration of an unwritten law. He who stole knew that he was risking his life.

FISH THAT WALKS

One of the strangest fishes in the world is the "goby," which can swim, but prefers to walk. Often it is seen climbing on the roots of mangroves in Florida, using its pectoral fins after the manner of legs. In the Phillipines there is a fish called the "poyo," which spends a large part of its time out of water. In fact, it soon dies if prevented from leaving the water. Sometimes it climbs trees to a considerable height. Another fish of the Phillippines, known as the "terebog," is fond of taking walks on land, and catches mice and even rats on occasions, devouring them with great relish. It attains a length of three feet.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings read? like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

BEST WAY TO MAKE MUSHROOM BEDS

First Necessity is Fresh Stable Manure, Whether in Cellar, Shed or the Open—Keep it Damp

As to the making of a mushroom bed, it does not matter whether the bed be made up in a cellar or shed, or in the open, the first necessity is found in a good quality of fresh stable manure, from which, as it accumulates, all long straw is shaken out and put aside to dry. If all the dung needed and it should be not less than a big cart load, can be got in at once quite fresh and not heated, so much the better. If it has to be got in driblets, then it must be put out thinly on the floor of a shed where it will not heat or become wet until enough is collected. Then it must be thrown up into a heap, be fairly well damped, and allowed to lie until it begins to get warm. Then turn it again inside out and leave it, turning it again a third time. If at either turning it seems dry, well damp it again. Then, after a few days the bed can be made up very solid wherever it is to be. If under cover then flatwise and a solid foot thick. If outdoors, then as a ridge three feet broad at the base and two and a half feet high, trodden firm and made neat. Outdoors the bed should be in a sheltered position and on a dry bottom. In both cases, give the bed all over a gentle damping with water, then cover it up thickly with with straw litter or mats to help the heat to rise, as so soon as that is at its height the bed may be spawned.

EGGS IN WINTER

Six Essentials That the Supply May be Maintained

1. Early hatched pullets or yearling hens. Early pullets are the most prolific layers See that the pullets selected for the laying pens come from hens that have a creditable record in winter performance. Like begets like, and pullets from heavy winter layers will lay better in winter than stock indiscriminately selected.

2. Dry, light, well-ventilated houses. A house with lots of windows and well ventilated is always dry. As good a way to ventilate a poultry house is to use cotton or muslin in one or two of the windows instead of glass. If a straw loft can be put in so much the better. Let in the sunlight and fresh air.

3. An egg-producing ration. Give the hens whole grain, mashes, green feed and meat. Whole grain, wheat, oats or barley is the backbone of the ration, mashes of ground oats with the hulls sifted out, shorts and bran give variety, and are easily digested; green food keeps the blood cool and gives bulk to the ration; meat supplies protein from which the albuminous portion of the egg is made. Grit for the gizzard and oyster shell or lime in some form for egg shells. Supply what else is required to form the egg.

4. Water. Hens will get along without water, getting what moisture they need from eating snow, butt hey do better where a supply of clean water is available most of the time; if possible all the time.

5. Exercise. Make the hens work for their living. Fat, lazy birds are never record winter layers. Exercise keeps hens warm, in good condition and contented. It is most easily provided for by feeding whole grain in a litter. Short straw, or chaff, makes the best litter. Have eight of ten inches of it on the floor, and make the birds dig their living out of it. Change the litter frequently.

6. Cleanliness. Have a dropping board beneath the roosts and scrape it clean every day. Have road dust or dry ashes or sand in convenient boxes for the birds to take dust baths in. If dust baths are provided, there is little danger of a flock becoming infested with lice. Occasionally smear the crevices about the roosts with kerosene and before winter sets in well clean out, whitewash and fumigate the house.

FISH-EATING COMPULSORY

When It Had to be Observed Two Days Every Week

Fish-eating, which has found such a strong advocate in Sir James Crichton-Browne, was at one time compulsory by law on at least two days in every week. In 1593 Queen Elizabeth's Privy Council issued a mandate ordaining that it should "not be lawful for any person within that realm to eat any flesh upon any days observed as fish-days, upon pain of forfeit of $15 (equal to about $150 at the present day) for every time he offended," and, further, that "no inn-holder, alehouse-keeper, or common table-keeper shall utter or put on sale upon a fish-day any kind of flesh victuals upon pain of forfeiture of $25." This Act was prompted by the fact that the fishing industry, which provided the nucleus of her Majesty's Navy, both in the matter of men and of vessels was suffering so severely by the growing indulgence of the people in beef and mutton that many of the fisherfolk were abandoning the trade. This the Privy Council rightly judged to be a danger to the realm.

WANTED AN EARTHQUAKE

The late Dr Maclagan greatly appreciated the point of a reply which the witty vicar of a sleepy Yorkshire village sent to him when asked to lend his church for the purpose of giving the people of the district a "quiet day" for meditation.

"My dear Lord Archbishop," wrote the vicar, "your very kind letter to hand. But what the people in this village want most in their spiritual life is not a 'quiet day,' but an earthquake."

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amount necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

THE SILENT SIGNAL

By E. P. Holt

When you were at school you learned that Sark was one of the Channel Islands. But they never mentioned Brechou, an island which is a kingdom in itself—a rock-bound, gale-swept bit of mother earth with half a mile of swift running green sea between it and Sark. It is lonely enough on a calm summer's day, with only the screaming wall of sea birds to disturb its solitude. It is in winter, however, that one may stand on Brechou and learn what solitude really is. Great, mountain-high waves smash themselves into foam against its rugged sides, and until those waves assume more peaceful form a man on Brechou is cut off from the world as completely as though he were buried in a cellar a mile under St. Paul's Cathedral, for there is neither telephone nor telegraph on the island, and no ship can effect a landing, even on the lee side, unless the weather be fairly calm.

I was standing on this lonely place a week ago when a weather-beaten man of Sark told me what happened there. I find his tale is unvarnished truth.

A hardy Scot formed the island, rearing a few sheep and churning butter when the weather was fine enough for a small boat to make the trip across the evil-looking green channel. Sometimes the giant seas ran riot for a week, and the men of Sark would turn their eyes occasionally to the storm-beaten rock and wonder whether all was well with the Scot and his wife and two children who shared his hermit life. The Scot was a man of few words, utterly without a sense of humor, and spent his life trying to make a meagre profit out of the island for the benefit of the Guernsey tradesman who rented Brechou and placed him there to work the farm. When a little boat danced over from Sark the Scot would place his basket of butter on board, turn on his heel, generally without a word, and, with a far-away look in his eyes, stand on a high rock and watch the fisherman's boat grow Sark.

The Man of Sark who told me all this, said he and the Scot had been as David and Jonathan in other days. Once, when the frenzied seas had been battering Brechou for nine days, he glanced across the impassable waterway, and felt a queer sensation at the back of his throat. There was one, and one only, way of communication between Brechou and Sark. A little mast stood on the topmost peak of the island farm. It had never been used before. Now a flag fluttered angrily in the gale at half-mast.

The Man of Sark was not used to emergencies but it needed no effort on his part to picture the bitter sorrow surrounded by every circumstance of pathos, which lay behind that silent signal. Breathlessly he scrambled over the cliff top, and in ten minutes was hammering on the door of a fisherman's hut. In a few words he told his story. The fisherman crammed his sou'-wester on his head, cast an eye over the wild waste of white water and looked grave. He knew that no boat could live for sixty seconds in that swirling pass.

"The Scot or his wife is ill—may be dead," urged the Man of Sark. "Perhaps it is one of the kiddies," he added in a grim voice. The Man of Sark is very human, and he has lived on Brechou with a child.

The fisherman shook his head and called two others of his craft. It was agony for them, but they had to stand there idle. They had families of their own, and to put off in that sea was suicide.

"Can nothing be done?" asked the Scot's old friend.

"In two days, perhaps, three, we may be able to cross," said the fisherman.

There was only one way left, and the Man of Sark made up his mind instantly. He ran to the little telegraph office at Sark and wired to Guernsey, to the Scot's employer: "Flag at half-mast on Brechou. No communication for nine days. Can you send steamer?" Then he breathed more freely; he had done all he could for his friend.

Four hours later the good ship Alert, straining and panting in the rough water, came around the bend at Herm. Her captain knew every inch of these treacherous waters with their venomous spikes of rocks dotted about everywhere, but the steamer was tossed up and down like a cork. He might not have taken the risk for the sake of the mere fee that had been paid for chartering his vessel specially. He knew the Scot and he knew the desperate need that flag at half-mast indicated.

With delicate manoeuvring the Alert was brought round to the lee side of the island. The Scot, who had watched her coming, stood on a rock.

"It is evidently the woman or one of the nippers," said the captain to his mate, as the steamer drew near. Then, making a miniature megaphone with his hands he roared out an inquiry as to what was wrong. The Scot could not, or would not, speak. The steamer drew close to the rock, and the captain pointed to the flattering flag.

"What's amiss?" he asked.

"Mon," said the Scot, making one of the longest speeches of his life, "I'm a' richt, but I'm clean oot o' matches, an' I canna licht ma pipe, I was hopin' they'd send a sma' boat across when the weather faired up."

It was a month later when David met Jonathan. The Scot eyed the Man of Sark sternly.

"They tell me ye wired to Guernsey," he observed drily.

"Yea," said the Man of Sark, feeling that he had at least one good action set down to his credit.

"I'm tellin' ye, mon," snapped the Scot, "ye'd nae richt tae dae it."

RUSSIAN DINING-ROOMS

The dining-rooms of some of the large cafes in Russia contain a pool of fresh water in which fish of various kinds and sizes swim about. Any patron of the restaurant who may wish a course of fish for dinner goes to the pool, picks out the particular one he may desire, and in a moment the waiter has captured it with a dip-net and sent it to the chef.

Royal Bank in Very Strong Position

Annual Statement Shows Large Increases in Amount of Assets in Specie and Dominion Government Notes—Year Showed Record Earnings.

Even at a time when a number of banks are placing their annual statements before the public, that of the Royal Bank of Canada will attract particular attention, because of the large transactions with which the bank has been identified during the course of the past year. The most important of the latter was, perhaps, the absorption by the Royal of the Union Bank of Halifax, as this deal contributed, to quite a large extent, to the phenomenal increases shown in the statement as of December 31st, in the aggregate assets, as well as in the total deposits and increases in both paid up capital and reserve fund.

The fact, however, that the consolidation was only affected on November 1st, leaving only two months of the year for the operation of the joint institution, indicates that practically the whole of the record net profits shown for the year were obtained from the operation of the Royal Bank itself.

The net profits of the years ending December 31st, 1910, reached the total of $951,336.99, equal to 18.29 per cent. on the average paid up capital for the year of $5,200,000. These earnings compared with $838,306.51, show an increase of $113,030.48.

One of the outstanding features of the statement, viewed from the standpoint of conservation, would seem to be the very large increases in the amount of the assets of the bank, represented by specie and Dominion Government notes, the gold and silver coin now standing at $4,141,664.06, compared with $3,500,347.62 at the end of the previous years, while Dominion Government notes now total $8,530,488.25. Against $493,532.25, at the end of 1909, showing an increase for the both accounts of approximately $4,118,000.00.

As indicating the very important position the Royal Bank of Canada now holds among the leading banks of the country, its aggregate assets now stand at $92,510,346.95 as against $67,051,102.62 at the end of the previous year. Of this amount $52,471,208.98 are represented in current loans and discounts against $33,544,795.10 at the end of the previous year. This big increase in current loans has been rendered possible by the growth of deposits, these now totalling $72,097,687.27 as against $50,822,129.31 at the end of the prepious year. Of this amount deposits bearing interest amount to $51,709,181.98 as against $33,356,628.86 at the end of the previous year, while deposits not bearing interest amount to $19,737,130.43, against $16,955,930.07 at the end of 1909.

An issue of new stock made during the course of the year was responsible for a big increase both in the paid up capital and in the reserve fund, the capital now standing at $6,200,000.00 against $5,000,000, at the end of 1909. The average paid up capital during the year, however, was only $5,200,000.00. The reserve fund made a big advance from $5,700,000.00 to $7,000,000.00, the sum of $1,200,000. of this increase being from premium on new stock, and $1000,000.00 being transferred from profit and loss account.

A Warrant Out for Man Who Promoted Bank

LOOKING FOR W. J. LINDSAY

THE MAN WHO SOLD BANK SHARES.

He Sought First Order for Winding Up the Institution—Attempts to Reach Him Were Unsuccessful.

The latest development in the Farmers' Bank situation is the issuing of a warrant for W. J. Lindsay, the man who promoted the bank, and who personally supervised the selling of its stock.

Although Crown Attorney Corley and the police officials absolutely refuse to discuss the affair, it was learned on good authority that the warrant was sworn out last night, and that since the Detective Department have been looking for him.

The issuing of the warrant was the result of the probing Curator Clarkson made into the formation of the bank, and the alleged mishandling of the funds obtained. Meanwhile, nothing definite is known of the whereabouts of the promoter.

SUED THE BANK.

Lindsay was engaged by an agreement made with General Manager Travers, acting for the Provisional Directors, to sell the bank's stock on commission, and as the result of this the first order for the winding up of the bank was made by him through his solicitors, Masten, Starr, Spence and Cameron.

This order claimed that the bank was indebted to him for $10,000, and that General Manager Travers owed him $2,000. It was filed quietly, and the information was not made public until subsequent to the bank's suspended. The case is still pending.

CAN'T LOCATE HIM TO-DAY.

According to statements made, Mr. Lindsay was employed by the bank for about three years, and that for over two years after the formation of the bank he was still their agent and sold their stock under written contract.

All attempts to reach Mr. Lindsay yesterday afternoon were unsuccessful. His office in the Canada Life building was closed, and no answer could be received at his apartments in the Elliott House Annex. His solicitor, J. R. L. Starr, also refused to make any statement.—Toronto News.

Assailant Must Have been Acquainted with the Old Man

IT IS BELIEVED THAT MEN WHO WERE ACQUAINTED WITH LOBINSKI WILL BE HELD.

Working on Murder Case—Nearly One Hundred Dollars in Silver Found Yesterday Hidden in Barn.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 17.—Detectives yesterday found a can of silver coins, mostly quarters and half dollars, hidden in the hay in one of the barns on the Lobinski property, at Wellesley, where the aged Polish miser was murdered last week. The total amount of the silver will not reach one hundred dollars. Examination showed that the bottle found near the body contained Paris green and no whiskey. The stomach has been sent to Toronto for examination, as well as the bottle with its contents.

The police have not changed their ideas as to who the probable murderers are, and it is almost certain that following the inquest arrests will be made, and that the suspected men are not strangers to the neighborhood.

Detectives Boyd and Huber were in Hanlon yesterday in connection with the story regarding one man, and the assertions he is reported to have made of obtaining money from Lobinski after getting him drunk, but will say nothing as to what they ascertained. In Berlin, however, the general impression is that the man was not mixed up with the crime.

Mr. Leys, a neighbor, who sometimes assisted the old man in his money affairs, as Lobinski was unable to write, states that he has seen as much as $500 in the house at one time, but some of it was kept elsewhere.

OLD MAN KNEW THEM.

The old man's assailants must have been acquaintances of his. The probability of this is strengthened by the apparent evidence that Lobinski himself opened the back door, letting in the men. If such were not the case there would be indications of a forced entrance, and the argument is still further supported by Lobinski's known habit of having a gun with him on the approach of strangers. There were three loaded shotguns in the shanty, but all were in their places on the wall, and the hammer used is known to have belonged to Lobinski.

STARTS THE NEW YEAR A NEW MAN

QUEBEC FARMER TELLS WHAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DID FOR HIM.

They Fixed Up His Kidneys, Made His Blood Pure, and Made Him Feel Young All Over.

Franklin Centre, Que., Jan. 17,—(Special)—The only way to start the New Year right is to get the health right, and Mr. William Gamble, a well known farmer living near here is telling his neighbors how he got his health right.

"I am a farmer sixty-seven years of age," Mr. Gamble says, "And I suffered with a weak back and stoppage of water off and on forten years. I used several boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and they made a new man of me. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best medicine I have ever taken."

Dodd's Kidney Pills will make a new man of you because they make the kidneys strong and healthy and able to do their work of straining all the impurities out of the blood. Pure blood means new life. It means good circulation and renewed strength and energy all over the body.

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all forms of Kidney Disease from Backache to Bright's Disease, and they are also doing a great work by giving renewed health and energy to thousands of Canadians who are run down, tired and generally feeling no good for anything. Start the new year by toning up the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills. It will pay you.

Eight Met Death in a Boiler Room

Washington, Jan. 17.—Eight men were killed and one seriously injured by a boiler explosion on the battleship Delaware, which is due at Hampton Roads at 9 o'clock to-night. Brief wireless despatches received at the Navy Department this afternoon said that the victims were scalded to death in the steam after the explosion. They were imprisoned in the boiler room, and had practically no chance of escape. The steam overpowered them instantly, and they died of the scalding while unconscious.

PETE CHARLTON TAKES PLAYERS WITH HIM TO BRANTFORD TO-DAY.

Port Hope is Left Alone—Charlton Denies the Picton Players Made Him Pay Up—Quit Because They Lost Money.

Manager Pete Charlton, late of the Picton-Pros., went through Toronto to-day en route to Brantford, where a hand-picked Brantford team will play its first game with Berlin to-night, and after the game a new schedule for the league will be drawn up.

Charlton puts in a vigorous denial to the statements made by Harry Burgoyne of the Picton team that the players had backed him and Buck Irving into a corner and made them pay up.

"We were losing money in Picton, so we decided to chuck it," said Charlton. "I called the players together and gave them their choice of their salaries in full or the franchise out flat and $50. They accepted the latter and assisted by the rink management will continue."

Charlton's team for Brantford is as follows:

Goal—Cross, of Belleville, formerly of Waterloo and Ingersol.
Point—Dubeau, of Trenton, who was with Berlin for two years. He also played with Montreal Shamrocks.
Cover—Charlton himself. He is too well known to require introduction.
Rover—Dusty, of Picton, formerly of Berlin, comes from Peterboro.
Centre—Mallen, of Trentan, formerly with Galt and All Montreal.
R. Wing—Dusome, of Belleville, formerly with Galt.
L. Wing—Decorrie, of Picton, formerly with Montreal Canadians and Shamrocks.
Spares—Chipchase, of Trenton, formerly of Montreal Wanderers, and Sanford, of Belleville, formerly with Brantford.

The sifting Charlton gave Belleville Picton, Trenton makes it look as if Port Hope is to be left all alone in her glory in the Lake Shore League.

DROPPED DEAD IN GALT YESTERDAY

He Was Waiting to Commence Work When He Suddenly Expired—Was Well Known.

Galt, Ont., Jan. 17.—Mr. John Wilson, of Galt, dropped dead at two minutes to seven yesterday morning in the moulding shop of the Goldie & McCulloch Company's south works. He was waiting with a number of other workmen to commence work at seven o'clock. He was prominent in the Moulders' Union here, holding the office of treasurer at the time of his death, and was president for several years. He was also well known in Mitchell, Port Perry, and Peterborough. A widow and six children survive him.

"Wait Until He Dies and Then See Me Hit the High Spots," SAID MRS. SCHENK.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 16.—"I feel confident of acquittal," declared Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, as the second week of her trial on a charge of attempting to poison her millionaire husband opened to-day.

Juliette Kline, alias Eleanor Zoeckler, the detective nurse, who swore that Mrs. Schenk had tried to kill kill her husband, was again called to the stand by Prosecutor Handlan when he renewed his attack on the defence.

Mrs. Kline knew that she would be subjected to a grilling ordeal through cross-examination by Mrs. Schenk's counsel. They have declared that they would be able to shatter the evidence given by the woman, but Prosecutor Handlan says he is sure of his case and that he will put Dr. J. W. Meyers on the stand to show that Mrs. Schenk purchased arsenic which she subsequently gave to her husband.

WAITING FOR HIS DEATH.

Asked as to various conversations with Mrs. Schenk, Mrs. Kline testified:

"Mrs. Schenk told me that the doctor had told her that Mr. Schenk was liable to drop dead any moment. She said she was going to stick it out to the end and have just as good a time as she could waiting for her husband to die. 'I am getting ready for the performance when Schenk dies and I believe I can go through with it' she said, 'but wait until after he dies and then see me hit the high places.'"

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 17.—The feeling between Attorneys in the trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, on the charge of attempting to poison her millionaire husband, has become so bitter that Judge Jordan is tried to the utmost in attempting to preserve court ethics. Their clashes were renewed as soon as the case reopened this morning, when Prosecutor Handlan demanded that Harvey D. Smith, reporter for a Pittsburg paper, be barred from the court room, declaring that he had sent out untruthful and sensational reports regarding the testimony of Mrs. Kline, alias Eleanor Zoeckler, the woman detective who has given such strong testimony against Mrs Schenk.

A SARCASTIC MANNER.

When Attorney S. O. Boyce again resumed his interrogation of the witness this morning, he used the same sharp and sarcastic manner which he used all day yesterday.

He asked the witness if she had discussed the method by which Dr. H. H. Crippen poisoned his wife in London; both of which Mrs. Kline denied. This closed her examination.

Mrs. Schenk allowed no sign of recognition to appear in her eyes as Mrs. Kline left the stand. As the women looked at each other, there was decided hostility in their glances.

THE CHAUFFEUR'S EVIDENCE.

Lundy Wilson, chauffeur for Mrs. Schenk, next to the stand. As he prepared to testify Mrs. Schenk gathered up her note book as if she intended to follow this witness closely and make many notes on his testimony.

HAD BEER AND SANDWICHES

Some of Mr. Handlan's questions were vigorously objected to by Mrs. Schenk's lawyers, but many of them were over-ruled by the court, and Wilson was allowed to tell his story.

"I telephoned to Phillips and carried notes to him," said the witness. "She didn't want any body at the store to know who was calling or the phone. On the automobile ride I would purchase the beer and sandwiches which were taken along. All of us would eat and drink, although sometimes Mrs. Schenk didn't drink. We usually went into the country in Ohio. I was ordered to stop the car at 'the regular place,' as we came to know it, and after eating and drinking, I would walk up the roadfor an hour or two, leaving them alone."

THEY SAT TOO CLOSE.

"Did you ever see anything indecent or improper between them?"

"The way they sat in the car was not proper."

"Did Mrs. Schenk ever tell you she had criminal relations with Phillips?"

"Yes, she admitted to me that she had."

"Do you recall a trip to Cambridge?"

"Yes," answered Wilson, "it took place last Decoration Day and the children went along. I took the children for a walk when the caratopped and Mrs. Schenk remained with Phillips."

"Did Mrs. Schenk tell you what occurred between them?"

"Yes."

"Did she frequently tell of her relations with Phillips?"

"Yes."

ASKED FIELDING ABOUT BANK.

A Year Ago the N.Y. Superintendent of Insurance Wrote to Canadian Minister.

Albany, N.Y., Jan. 17—Official reports here show that in January of last year W. H. Hotchkiss, superintendent of insurance in New York, wrote to Hon. W. S. Fielding asking the following questions:

"1. What was the arrangement between John Tevis, or John Tevis, and his associates, whereby the Farmers' Bank of Canada advanced to him, or to him and them, $150,000, shortly prior to December 20th, 1909; the information desired to include, if you think proper, the names of any other persons associated with Mr. Tevis in borrowing this money from such bank, and the collateral deposited by him or them in that connection.

QUEER TRANSACTION.

"2. What arrangements was there between Mr. Tevis and this bank which led its general manager to proceed to Syracuse with the currency, instead of delivering to Tevis a draft or cheque, to whichh if he was a borrower in due course he should have been entitled.

WHY THE DEPOSIT?

"3. Whether as a part of the arrangement it was understood and agreed between Mr. Tevis, or Mr. Tevis and his associates, and the Farmers' Bank of Canada, that the insurance company should deposit such bank said sum of $150,000, that being the sum also loaned.

ANY CLAIM AGAINST IT?

"4. Whether or not the Farmers' Bank of Canada has any lien or claim to have been made with it on or about December 20th, 1909, and evidenced by the certificate of deposit above mentioned. In this connection I hand you herewith a photograph upon the deposit of $150,000, seeming copy of such certificate of deposit, which in the opinion of this department indicates that the transaction was not in due course of business.

I shall also be grateful to you for any other information which you care to furnish concerning the transaction."

The following telegram was received in reply:

To Wm. H. Hotchkiss, Superintendent of Insurance, Albany, N.Y.:

Ottawa Jan. 12, 1911.

There being no Government bank inspection in Canada, I do not see how we can at present take the action you desire. Probably the bank on application from you would explain the whole matter.

THE MORNING TIMES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1911.

FIVE GENERATIONS

Great - Great - Grandmother Recovers Sight after 30 Years' Blindness

With a family of five generations alive and well, Mrs. Potter, of the village of Thundersley in Essex, England, is a proud old lady. She is in her ninety-eighth year, and still hale and hearty, but the most remarkable thing about her is that for thirty years she was totally blind, and at the end of that time her sight was restored. That was about thirteen months ago and now she is able to see as well as ever. Her blindness followed on a severe attack of influenza and bronchitis. When asked how she recovered her sight, or by what treatment she benefited, she will say that no doctor and no treatment cured her, it was done simply by prayer. She remembered the New Testament stories of the power of faith, so she tried the same method, and found it successful.

Next in the family line comes Mrs. Wheel, her daughter, who is seventy four years of age, a sturdy, splendid-looking woman, who seems effectually to have defied the ravages of time, for she is capable of a hard day's work still, and indeed looks as if she could do as much as a man. She has had fourteen children, of whom six are still living.

Her eldest daughter is Mrs. Finch, who is fifty-four years of age, and the youngest mother in the line is Mrs. Gosling, aged thirty-four, and the youngest representative of the family, shown in the photograph, is her son, aged eleven years.

The older members of this remarkable family live in and near the village of Thundersley, in Essex, in the direction of Southend, which must be one of the most remarkably healthy spots in England. Mrs. Wheel's husband is still living there. He has lived in the same house for eighty-seven years!

Passing through the village one cannot help being struck with the number of old people, and, further, with their remarkably healthy and hearty appearance. Thundersley is evidently the place where old age pensioners thrive. Mr. and Mrs. Wheel and her sister are all in receipt of old age pensions.

BOUND BABY'S ARMS

Court Orders Imprisonment for an Inhuman Father

One month's hard labor was the sentence passed at Bolton, England, on John Anthony Johnson, a young laborer, of Henson Street, for cruelty towards his child. Mrs. Johnson said that before the child was born her husband ill-treated her.

"On one occasion did the baby in bed put its hand on its father's face?" asked the prosecuting solicitor.

"Yes, sir," replied Mrs. Johnson.

"And what did he do?"

"He got some string and tied its arms down to its body so that it could not move them."

"Liar!" exclaimed Johnson.

"Did you undo the string from the child's arms?"

"Yes."

"And what did he do then?"

"He thrashed me."

It was stated that the child only weighed six pounds, while the average weight of one of its age was eleven pounds, eight ounces. Mrs. Johnson was granted a separation order, carrying six shillings per week.

A LUCKY FISHERMAN

Whilst trolling in the bay at St. John's, N.B., C. I. White hooked and landed a maskinonge, which when weighed, tipped the scales at 25½ pounds. It was a fine specimen of this gamey fish.

TWO MEANINGS

"Did your father leave your mother much?" asked the man with intentions of the little boy in black.

"Twice a week," was the unexpected answer.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

She busied herself with tearing up the rest of the linen. When night came, and Mr. Mayne could leave his post, she showed him the paper and asked him to translate it.

He was a good Eastern scholar, but the dull rays of a small oil lamp were not helpful in a task always difficult to English eyes. He bent his brows over the script and began to decipher some of the words.

"Malcolm-sahib . . . the Company's . . . Regiment of Horse . . . heaven-born Princess Roshinara Begum . . . Where in the world did you get this, Winifred, and how did it come into your possession?" he said.

"It was in Mr. Malcolm's turban, the one you brought me to-day from his quarters."

"In his turban? Do you mean that it was hidden there?"

"Yes, something of the kind."

Mayne examined the paper again.

"That is odd," he muttered after a pause.

"But what does the writing mean? You say it mentions his name and that of the Princess Roshinara? Surely it has some definite significance."

The Commissioner was so taken up with the effort to give each spidery curve and series of distinguishing dots and vowel marks their proper bearing in the text that he did not catch the note of disdain in his niece's voice.

"I have it now," he said, peering at the document while he held it close to the lamp. "It is a sort of pass. It declares that Mr. Malcolm is a friend of the Begum and gives him safe conduct if he visits Delhi within three days of the date named here, but I cannot tell when that would be until I consult a native calendar. It is signed by Bahadur Shah and is altogether a somewhat curious thing to be in Malcolm's possession. Is that all you know of it—merely that it was stuck in a fold of his turban?"

"This accompanied it," said Winifred, with a restraint that might have warned her hearer of the passion it strove to conceal. But Mayne was deaf to Winifred's coolness. If he was startled before, he was positively amazed when she produced the necklace.

He took it, appraised its value silently, and scrutinized the workmanship in the gold links.

"Made in Delhi," he half whispered. "A wonderful thing, probably worth two lakhs of rupees or even more. It is old, too. The craftsman who fashioned this clasp is not to be found nowadays. Why, it may have been worn by Nurmahal herself! Each of its fifty pearls could supply a chapter of a romance. And you found it, together with this safe-conduct, in Malcolm's turban?"

"Yes, uncle. Do you think I would speak carelessly of such a precious object? When one has discovered a treasure it is a trait of human nature to note pretty closely the place where it came to light."

Mayne was yet too much taken up with puzzling side-issues to pay heed to Winifred's demeanor. He remembered the extraordinary proposal made by Roshinara to Malcolm ere she drove away to Delhi from her father's hunting lodge. Could it be possible that his young friend had met the princess on other occasions than that which Malcolm laughingly described as the lunging of Nejdi and the plunging of his master? It occurred to him now, with a certain chilling misgiving, that he had himself broken in with a bewildered exclamation when Frank seemed to regard the Princess's offer of employment in her service as worthy of serious thought. There were other aspects of the affair, aspects so sinister that he almost refused to harbor them. Rather to gain time than with any definite motive, he stooped over the pass again, meaning to read it word for word.

"Of course you have not forgotten, uncle, that Mr. Malcolm took us into his confidence so far as to tell us of the curious letter that reached him after the second battle outside Delhi?" said Winifred. "It saved him at Bithoor when the men from Cawnpore meant to hang him, and, seeing that he had the one article in his possession, it is passing strange that he should have omitted to mention the other—to me."

Then the man knew what it all meant to the girl. He placed his arm around her neck and drew her towards him.

"My poor Winifred!" he murmured, "you might at least have been spared such a revelation at this moment."

His sympathy broke down her pride. She sobbed as though her heart would yield beneath the strain. For a little while there was no sound in the room but Winifred's plaints, while ever and anon the walls shook with the crash of the cannonade and the bursting of shells.

. . . . . .

Ahmed Ullah, Moulvie of Fyzabad, had a quick ear for the arrival of the native officer of cavalry from Lucknow.

"Peace be with thee, brother!" said he, after a shrewd glance at the travel-worn and blood-stained man and horse. "Thou hast ridden far and fast. What news hast thou of the Jehad, and how fares it at Lucknow?"

"With thee be peace!" was the reply. "We fought the Nazarenes yesterday at a place called Chinhut, and sent hundreds of the infidel dogs to the fifth circle of Jehannum. The few who escaped our swords are penned up in the Residency, and its walls are now crumbling before our guns. By the tomb of Nisam-ud-din, the unbelievers must have fallen ere the present hour."

The moulvie's wicked eyes sparkled.

"Praise be to Allah and his Prophet forever!" he cried. "How came this thing to pass?"

"My regiment took the lead," said the Risaldar, proudly. "We had long chafed under the commands of the hunsoers. At last we rose and made short work of our officers. You see here—" and he touched a rent in his right side, "where one of them tried to stop the thrust that ended him. But I clave him to the chin, the swine-eater, and when Larrence-sahib attacked us at Chinhut we chased him over the Canal and through the streets."

"Wao! wao! This is good hearing! Want thou sent by some of the faithful to summon me, brother?"

"To summon thee and all true believers to the green standard. Yet

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

A MODERN CRUSOE

Three Years With "Friday" On An Uninhabited Island

The romance of a modern Robinson Crusoe and the Southern Seas was heard by the President, Sir Samuel Evans, who was asked to presume the death of one John Willis Kirkaldy as having occurred in or since the year 1896. Mr. Powers said that Mr. Kirkaldy emigrated to the South Seas in 1885, and had no fixed abode. He traded in New Zealand and the Pacific Islands, and corresponded regularly with his mother and sister until 1893. In that year he was shipwrecked on an unnamed and uninhabited island of the Solomon group, where he remained much like Robinson Crusoe, for three years, when he was rescued by a chance vessel calling at the island for water.

His lordship.—Was there a "Man Friday"? (Laughter.)

Counsel.—Yes, in the shape of a gentleman named Van Brun, of whom, however, nothing is known. After they were taken off the uninhabited island, continued counsel, the two went to New Zealand, when the correspondence between Mr. Kirkaldy and his family at home was resumed. He appeared to have suffered from ague contracted on the island, and from Auckland, New Zealand, where he was staying, he wrote saying: "I am a mere wreck of myself." From the Royal Hotel, Sydney, New South Wales, Mr. Kirkaldy wrote saying that he was very ill, and that he had arranged to return to "Man Friday" (Mr. Van Brun), who was in New Zealand, and afterwards was going on "a big trading" in the Solomon Islands. Several letters were subsequently written to Mr. Kirkaldy which came back through the Dead Letter Office, and he had not since been heard of.

His lordship.—He does not seem to have found "Friday" on the uninhabited island. "Friday" seems to have gone with him.

Mr. Powers. — Yes; they were wrecked together.

Replying to a letter which the mother wrote to him, Mr. Kirkaldy said: "You say, 'Do settle down; you have roamed enough.' But what inducement have I, a lonely man without ties of any description?"

His lordship.—I see he caught turtles on this unnamed island which he says was about 50 acres in extent. He appears to have described the ague, but unfortunately not the island, which would be more interesting.

Leave was granted to presume the death as in or since 1896.

TOO WONDERFUL WHISKEY

A Remarkable Description of the Welsh Brand

Mr. Lloyd-George informed the House of Commons that the only distillery set up in Wales has been closed, which from the poetical point of view only is a matter of regret "Some years ago," writes a correspondent, "I visited this establishment and found there quite a big brewing of the 'cratur,' or the Welsh equivalent for the same. But what amused me was a document I came across some time afterwards in which Welsh whiskey was landed to the shies in the following terms:—"Welsh whiskey is the most wonderful whiskey that ever drove the skeleton from the feast or painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of peat and barley washed white with the waters of the Theweryn. In it you will find the sunshine and shadow that chased each other over the billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dew of night, the wealth of Summer and Autumn, a rich content, all golden with imprisoned light."

MOVING A CHURCH TOWER

The remarkable feat of moving a church tower to permit of the church being enlarged is being accomplished in Belgium. The work is being done by two engineers, and the vast undertaking occupies only eight workmen. New foundations have been prepared for the tower about thirty feet away, and along the machinery constructed for its transport the tower, which dates from the fourteenth century and is said to weigh 2,700 tons, is now being moved. Already about 6 feet has been covered, and it is hoped that the tower will by the end of the week have reached its new site. Large crowds assemble each day to witness the singular spectacle.

DETRUCTIVE CATERPILLARS

A. C. Wood, Alexandria, brought to The Guardian office in Charlottetown two very large green caterpillars which he found on apple trees in his orchard. They were as thick as one's little finger, and measured from two and a half to three inches in length, green in color and, judging by the way they had feasted on apple tree leaves placed in the parcel for their benefit, of voracious appetite. The caterpillars proved to belong to the American Emperor Moth, a very large and destructive moth which devours many times its own weight in pear, apple and other fruit tree leaves, and should be destroyed wherever and whenever found.

PROFESSOR AND STUDENT

It is told of an English professor that he once wrote on the blackboard in his laboratory:

"Prof. Atherton is pleased to inform his students that he has this day been appointed honorary physician to her Majesty the Queen."

In the course of the morning he had occasion to leave the room, and found on his return that some student had considerately added to the announcement these words:

"God save the Queen!"

IN THE DARK

Diogenes returned from his search for an honest man.

"Given up the chase?" they inquired.

"It became a matter of necessity," replied the philosopher. "Someone stole my lantern."

THOSE BIG HATS

The "Man in the Seat Behind" is up in arms in the religious papers against the enormous hats worn in church by ladies. "For many Sundays past," he says, "I can truthfully declare that, except at quite early services, I have seen neither pulpit nor preacher. My outlook is entirely bounded by rows of enormous hats."

RARE SNAKE IN ENGLAND

A fine specimen of the North American bull snake has been killed at Ramsgate, near Gloucester. It is said that it either belonged to a [illegible] or had escaped from a [illegible] menagerie.

RINGER'S ROMANCE

By J. H. Rooney, Jr.

Old Bigoneau had been the bell ringer of the village as far back as I remember, and by coming in contact with the priest for years he had become familiar with all parts of the church services to such a degree that there was, at times, almost something clerical about his persona.

By profession he was a tailor, and you might see him every day sitting on the table in his shop, which faced the church, always wearing an enormous pair of old-fashioned spectacles. He had a long unkempt beard, which made him look like a dwarf, and I was about the most unsociable person I have ever known. Everyone called him old Bigoneau, not because of his age, for he was not old, but because of his cranky and unpleasant ways and the peculiar habit he had of thinking aloud.

When I had grown to be quite a boy something strange happened to old Bigoneau.

One night, when he was fast asleep, an automobile stopped outside his house and two strange men woke him up rudely. Bigoneau had no more strength than a child, but he loved his miserable life and begged the men to do him no harm.

"You are welcome to all I possess," he said, "but, as you see, it is not much."

His two visitors were false beards, big goggles and long linen dusters.

"We don't want your money," one of the burly giants replied. "Just get up quick, dress and come along with us. You know how to sew and say the prayers for the dying, that's enough."

"Why don't you go to the priest?"

"That's none of your business. Hurry up and keep your tongue until we ask you to talk."

Bigoneau dressed and followed the men outside. It was the second time in his life he had seen an automobile. He remembered having told the road to the nearest town one evening to a big chauffeur who had stopped him outside the church. Perhaps this was the same car. They sped away at breakneck speed, but Bigoneau did not realise it, and when they stopped he thought they had only travelled a dozen miles or so.

They were outside a big chateau, with massive grey towers and surrounded by a moat. The car rolled across a bridge and through a mass of halls and rooms. Bigoneau was conducted to a large apartment, where he saw a woman lying on a bed while a tall, masked man was standing near her.

"Father," cried the young woman, "do forgive me! Take pity on me and yourself!"

"Pity," growled the giant. "Have you shown any pity to me? Have you not dishonored our noble name? All you have to do now is to prepare yourself to die. You have asked that it be not our hands that send you to your death. This man will do the deed, and he will not be responsible for it, for he will be forced to act as we say."

"Come on," said the colossus, turning to Bigoneau. "Read the prayers for the dying to her and ask God to forgive her sins, for which she is now about to atone with her life."

Bigoneau cried as he began to say the prayers. The poor girl repeated the words softly, as the men left the room for a moment.

"Madame," said Bigoneau, "I would gladly give my life to save yours."

"You must obey them," she said.

"What do they want me to do?"

"They want you to kill me."

"Never! I will never commit a crime like that."

"It will be no crime," said the girl. "If you do not kill me, they will."

The colossus and his mate entered and handed the tailor a big bag.

"Sew her up in that," he ordered, "and when you have done that you will push her into the river."

Bigoneau hesitated, but the girl begged: "Obey them please for my sake."

The tailor slowly started to sew up the bag around the unfortunate woman.

"Throw her on your back," ordered the father when he had finished.

Bigoneau had the strength of the children of the people who carry burdens heavier than themselves, and besides the poor girl weighed only very little. With the bag on his back he followed the three men to the river.

"Do not let father be present at my death," the poor girl moaned.

"One must respect the wishes of the dying," said the father, and walked off.

The two brothers exchanged a few words. Then one of them addressed the tailor: "Tie this stone to the bag."

Bigoneau obeyed.

"Throw her into the river now!"

"Never!" said Bigoneau, in despair.

"Then I will do it for you."

"Do not let him do it," cried the girl.

At the sound of her voice Bigoneau got together all his courage and threw the bag into the river, but at the same moment the brothers seized him and threw him out after it, while a voice cried: "The honor of the Normadet is well worth the life of a peasant."

Bigoneau was so mad that he felt death to be delivery, and he would not even have tried to save himself by swimming if he had not felt the bag floating next to him. The stone had fallen off. Then he struck out with all his might and some moments later the current carried the two ashore on a rocky point.

* * * * * *

Two weeks later the priest was about to appoint a bell ringer, when Bigoneau appeared accompanied by a young woman of unusual beauty, his bride.

A HUSBAND'S DUTY

TATTOOED BY LIGHTNING

Two men named Congdon and Smith were killed by lightning and another badly injured at Linton, England. The men, who were fishing, took shelter from the storm under a lemon bush, where they were struck by a flash of lightning. Two were killed instantly, and the third was much burned, but was breathing, and was revived with the aid of artificial respiration. The lines killed were marked on the bodies with the exact representation of the bush, and a boy with them had tattooed on his back a representation of a tree near by. He was uninjured except for shock.

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"

If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor price.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when "he comes of age that lot will be worth consid- "erable money and will provide a handsome "stake for him in life; it is at least most sub- "stantial life insurance—sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Albert has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid—a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no licenses shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City Lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your application by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots. On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

MURDEROUS MILLINERY

Some of the Cruelties Practised for Sake of Millinery.

The havoc that is being wrought among birds to satisfy demands of modern millinery was pressed home by Mr. James Buckland in a striking speech at the annual meeting of the Selborne Society, London, England.

"The whole volume of the bird life of the world is being reduced at an alarming rate," he said, and then he gave the reason—that to obtain the feathers the birds had to be killed in the breeding season.

At that time birds' natural fear of man disappears under the stress of providing for and protecting their young, and it is under conditions such as these that the old birds are shot and rifled of their plumage, and the young left to die of starvation in the nest.

Scenes of Slaughter.

Thirty years ago there were herons in the United States which were estimated to contain about 2,000 egret white herons. At the same period these birds roamed widely over China in prodigious multitudes. But even these vast hordes could not withstand slaughter during the breeding season, and now the white heron is practically exterminated both in North America and in China. Now the same havoc is being wrought in South America—in every country of the world, indeed where the white heron is still found.

The feeding grounds of the Amorcan ibises, the largest but one of living storks, are also the scenes of slaughter during the very period when the bird should have respite. Thirty thousand quills of these birds are sold annually in London alone, and as the species was never very numerous, it will soon be wiped out.

So wary is the bird that it keeps beyond the range of a fowling-piece, but is shot to-day with a soft-nosed bullet from a Mauser rifle—a beautiful miniature, which often costs only a great deal from the body of the bird. Even mutilation be such as to prevent flight, the majestic creature will take wing in one last effort to escape. Of a sudden it falls lifeless to the earth—and woman's wish is gratified.

One Gang Shoots 300,000

So far this year but three plume sales have taken place in London, yet in these three sales alone there were catalogued the skins of over 25,000 humming birds.

Even the law is set at defiance by the gangs of men who make a livelihood by the slaughter of the birds. Not long ago a gang was surprised on one of the islands which the United States had decreed to be a "bird reservation," and these men had in their possession the plumage of 300,000 birds.

There was no bird in the world to wards which the eyes of zoologists were turned in more admiring wonder than that pride of Australia, the lyre bird. Yet the rarer the bird became the fiercer grew the competition to secure its tail feathers, and not long ago a party of plume-hunters surrounded a patch of scrub in which the birds were known to be breeding, and, setting fire to it, shot down the birds as they struggled through one pitiless ring of fire to meet death in another. Then the tail feathers were cut off and the bodies left to rot.

It was decided to organise a crusade throughout the country by means chiefly of lantern lectures, and stir up public sentiment in favour of the Plumage Bill, by which the importation of feathers would be prohibited by law, and an appeal was made for subscriptions.

BITTEN

Standing by the entrance of a large estate in the suburbs of Glasgow are two huge dogs carved out of granite. An Englishman, going by in a hack, thought he would have some fun with his Scotch driver.

"How often, Jock, do they feed those two big dogs?"

"Whenever they bark, sir," was the straightforward reply.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Mairs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneto, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinal twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

CHANCE FOR FRUIT GROWERS

Speaking at a complimentary dinner given by Victorians in London, Dr. Mead said the Victorian Land Settlement Delegation had finished its work in Great Britain—the work of placing information before those desiring freehold homes on liberal terms on 130,000 acres of good agricultural land. The new settlers, he said, who took up general farming and dairying would find customers for everything they grew and prices that would leave them a handsome reward.

Fruit-growers were going out from England, and they would find a country with great horticultural possibilities. There was a large demand for canned vegetables in the East and an unlimited demand for fresh fruit in Europe. In no other country than Australia, said Dr. Mead, could a man with $1,000 to $10,000 capital find a more attractive and healthful home.

VEGETABLES THRIVE HERE

One of the finest cabbages ever seen in Fort William weighs 19 pounds, and is of excellent quality. Mr. Coombs, who grew it, say he has many more almost as large.

THE LARGEST CRAB

The largest crab in the world, a specimen of the giant spider crab from Japan, is at the Museum of Natural History, New York. The spread of the two largest legs, or arms, having sawlike teeth, called "pincers," is nearly twelve feet, and the body portion is over one foot in diameter and about the size of a large dinner-plate. The monster crab inhabits the sea and islands of Japan, and is known to occur at depths of over two thousand feet.

WHAT FEW REALIZE

There is a time when one looks towards forty as the fringe of the Arctic zone of life. No one realizes that there is a broad temperate belt of middle age, wherein men can labor hard, long, and fruitfully.—Mr. Lloyd George.

SUSPICIOUS

"Let me show you 'Love Letters of Wise Men,'" said the clerk in the book emporium.

"Are they signed?" asked the cautious bookworm.

"Yes, indeed, every one of them."

"Then they must be forgeries. Wise men never sign their names to love letters."

WOMEN MAKE GOOD WAGES

Sixty women have gone from Spokane to Walla Walla to pick prunes, and they are making as high as $3.50 a day at the work. The crop this year is heavy, and stewed prunes promises to be a popular article of diet in many boarding houses next winter.

MONEY IN RAISING HOGS

The amount of money paid out by one Chatham buyer to farmers for live hogs in the past year alone amounts to over $225,000. It is further stated that one buyer alone spent over $90,000 in one month recently buying hogs.

"SHALL WE DEE?"

Pathetic Story of a Flooded Colliery.

Describing, in his annual report on the mines of North and East Lancashire, the disaster at the Aspen Colliery, Accrington, Mr. Gerrard, Inspector of Mines, gives a moving account of the efforts of two men and a boy to escape from the water which had flooded the workings: —

The water was too strong for Haworth, who turned back. Kenyon kept on; some distance in the water he came to the boy Redmayne, crying and calling out "Mother, mother!" The boy had no light. Kenyon said, "Thee cling to me" (he had only a flannel vest with a belt over it on him, no trousers, shoes or stockings). The boy said, "Shall we dee?"

They struggled on through the water until a large stone knocked Kenyon down. Recovering himself, proceeding a little further, he missed the boy, but did not dare to go back for him; he nearly gave in several times. Resting by placing his head against the roof, he thought of his home and children and struggled on until met by Butterworth and rescued.

EARL OF LEITRIM

He Offers Every Encouragement to His Tenants

The Earl of Leitrim has always taken a deep personal interest in the management and improvement of his estate in Donegal, which covers 53,000 acres. He offers every encouragement to his tenants to avail themselves of the Land Purchase Acts, and to become owners of the land they till. Lord Leitrim, who is one of the largest landowners in the North of Ireland, is great-nephew to the third Earl, whose murder on his own estate caused so profound a sensation about thirty years ago. He succeeded to the title when a boy of thirteen. The Earl fought in South Africa with the Irish Yeomanry, and celebrated his majority in the Boer prison at Nooitgedacht.

THE CHILDREN AT THE GATE

I say that the world is bitter-sweet,
And its fortunes come too late;
But twilight falls with the pattering feet
Of the children at the gate.
And I know whatever my toil may be,
Their arms in the evening will necklace me!

I say that the world has stormy skies,
And faintly the sad stars shine;
But night brings stars when the children's eyes
Look tenderly into mine.
And I know, whatever my toil may be,
Those eyes are welcoming lights to me!

—Frank L. Stanton.

A VERY GOOD PRINCIPLE, TOO

HANDLING OF POTATOES

Some Useful Hints as to Digging Sorting and Storing the Crop

If potatoes have not been affected with blight or rot, the best time to dig them is as soon as the tops have died, if the weather is favorable. Too often potatoes are dug just before the frost becomes severe enough to freeze the soil to the depth of an inch or so. This time of digging is usually chosen as a matter of convenience and quite irrespective of when the stalks die. The stalks dry up in many places about September and often before. If the potatoes are planted on sandy, loamy soil or a gravelly loam with good natural or artificial drainage there is not much danger of injuring the crop by leaving them in the ground a short time, but if there is no disease the sooner they are dug the better. Potatoes which have been killed by blight will usually rot as soon as the conditions are favorable, and for this reason a diseased crop is better left in the ground, as the tubers which are diseased will most of them show signs of rot before they have to be taken up in October. If diseased potatoes are dug and stored as soon as the tops are dead the disease will almost certainly develop in the pit or cellar, and healthy tubers will rot from contact with the diseased ones. It is not a good practice to dig diseased potatoes early and put them in the field. It is better to delay digging as long as possible and then put the potatoes in a cool, well ventilated cellar where the disease may be checked. Potatoes in wet soil should be dug sooner than those in that which is dryer and well drained. They should be dug in dry weather, so that when they are taken to the cellar or storeroom they will be perfectly dry. If the tubers are housed when wet the conditions become very favorable for the development of the disease which may affect them and for the rotting of the healthy potatoes from contact with those affected.

Digging

The old-fashioned way of digging with the fork is too slow and expensive a method. One man with a fork will dig little more than half an acre a day, while a good potato digger will dig from four to six acres a day. Where several acres of potatoes are grown a mechanical digger becomes almost a necessity and although the outlay for a digging machine amounts to fifty or sixty dollars or more it will harvest the crop at a much smaller cost per bushel than can be done by hand. Not only will it raise the crop more economically than by a fork or plough, but with it the grower is more likely to get his crop dug and picked up while the weather is fine, which is a great consideration.

Where large areas are grown it will be found most convenient to have a number of boxes laid here and there along the rows just far enough apart to allow a man to dump a pail full into them. These boxes should be made strong and of light material and capable of holding about one bushel. They can then be easily lifted by one man onto the wagon and drawn to the cellar or store-room.

Storing

Potatoes should be stored dry in a cool, well ventilated cellar or storeroom which is perfectly dark, as potatoes soon deteriorate in quality if exposed to light. There is no doubt that great loss occurs every year from the careless storing of potatoes by putting them in wet into warm and poorly ventilated cellars and piling them in great heaps. Instead of piling the potatoes against the wall or on the floor, slats should be nailed about one inch apart and about four inches from the wall and a temporary floor should be laid four inches above the permanent floor with small openings between the boards. This will allow air to circulate around and through the pile. If the piles have to be made very large, square ventilators of wood made partly with open slats on two sides and running from the top to the bottom of the pile could be put in here and there through the pile. Another good plan is to keep the potatoes in large crates made with slats nailed close enough together to prevent the potatoes from dropping through. Thousands of bushels of potatoes are lost every year through lack of ventilation. The temperature of the cellar or store-house should be kept as near to 33 to 35 degrees as possible. The cooler potatoes are kept without freezing the better. If too warm the value of the tubers for seed is lessened, since they sprout too easily. They are also much injured for eating.

A good sorting machine can now be obtained which lessens labor considerably. The practice of many growers is to sort and bag the potatoes just before marketing.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings reads like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

QUEER FOOD FOR BABIES

Mothers Who Give Them Beef, Onions and Bloaters

The meetings and conferences in connection with the Royal Sanitary Institute were continued at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton. The Countess of Chichester was unavoidably prevented from presiding at the conference of women on hygiene, and her place was taken by the Mayoress of Brighton. Among the papers read was one by Mrs. W. MacDonald, of Uxbridge, dealing with the feeding of infants. She said that many mothers did not know that pickled onions, corned beef and bloater heads were injurious food for their infants, and that in pure milk they had all the necessary nutrition to sustain infant life for the first six or eight months. One mother, when remonstrated with for giving her baby beef, said, "Well, what am I to do? He won't eat pork."

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise oearning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in huildings this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

THE AWAKENING

By Charles Herbert

It is not a very unusual thing when a boy and a girl grow up together and live at one another's side for many years for their acquaintance to develop entirely on brother and sister lines, even though there is no relationship between them. Both of them get into the habit of taking one another for grant d, and if one of them suddenly awakes to the fact, either that the boy at her side has become a man, strong and gifted and attractive, or that the girl has become a woman, lovely, charming, and magnetic, it generally comes as a shock to the other. Just such a young couple—Curtis Blunden and Myra Yorke—were standing one fine September afternoon listening to the music of the band on the pier at Hastings, whither they had strolled in desultory fashion, leaving the elderly gentleman, who was Curtis Blunden's father and Myra Yorke's guardian sitting on the hotel verandah. Mr. Blunden had smiled a satisfied smile as he watched them off, and saw that Myra slipped her arm into Curtis Blunden's in the most matter-of-fact and confident way.

Myra had come into his house a playful, romping child of six, the very opposite of the quiet, studious boy, and had teased the very life out of him, but she had supplied the needed flash of color in the sombre life of both the busy father and the bookworm son; and the house had never seemed the same before or since. So the years flashed by, and now all the thought of Mr. Blunden was bent upon bringing about the union of the two.

"I will speak to Curtis to-night," he determined.

That night after dinner the old man broached the object of his life to his son, and, with pale face Curtis listened

"It's all very well, pater," he said, at last. "You speak as if you were certain Myra would marry me. What would you do supposing she refused?"

"I should find another home for the ungrateful girl, and cease every attempt to look after her property. I have only done it for you, my boy."

"I'm sorry, sir, but I can't entertain the proposal for a moment. Myra's a nice girl as a sister, but as a wife—why, it's impossible!"

"Nevertheless, it must be," returned the other, doggedly.

"It shall not be!" said his son.

His father sprang from his chair, all his terrible temper getting the upper hand, and exclaimed:

"Either you propose to Myra or you leave my house and trust to your own beggarly resources! To-morrow I give you, but only to-morrow! Do you think I am going to have the plans of a lifetime defeated by obstinacy like yours? Alter your mind or go!"

"I will go to-night if you wish, sir," returned his son.

Angry as his father, Curtis hastily went upstairs, packed his valise, and then strode down to see Myra.

"Good-bye, Myra!" he said, putting out his hand. "I'm off for good. The pater and I have quarrelled."

"Nonsense!" she said, smiling. "I'll work the pater round. You stop, and to-morrow morning you'll be fast friends again. What is it about?"

Curtis felt his heart beating wildly. Perhaps if he told her the truth, she might—she might consent even yet. But he put it from him as an unworthy thought, and simply said:

"Oh, about certain plans in life he has for me with which I don't agree. I'd better leave for a time, but promise to let me know if anything goes wrong with him, won't you, and, above all, don't speak to him about this quarrel. I've never exacted a pledge from you about anything before, so give me your word, Myra."

And, moved by his insistence, she promised, fully expecting that, like many a quarrel between them before, it would be all over in a week.

But the weeks had dragged into months, and they were back at their own home, and still there was no sign of relenting on the part of Mr. Blunden, though the last six months had aged him terribly. Myra waited in vain for the least sign of eagerness to see his son, or to hear of him. Compassionately she left Curtis's letters to herself about, as if by accident, and at last, hustling one day into the dining-room, she actually found the old gentleman, with very red face, trying to put back a letter of his son's into the envelope, but it had stuck.

"Ah, pater," she cried, delightedly, glad to break the ice, "I knew you wanted to hear about him, you—you scamp!"—putting her cheek against his.

"He's the scamp," he said, laughing, in spite of himself. "I believe I'll marry you myself, since he won't have you."

Then a light broke in upon her, and, raising a threatening forefinger, she said:

"Was it over me you quarrelled?"

"Yes," said the old gentleman shamefacedly. "I wanted him to propose to you, and he wouldn't."

"But he did," she said, "and I wouldn't have him."

Mr Blunden looked thunderstruck.

"Didn't he acknowledge it?" she proceeded.

"Not he," said Mr Blunden, a light now breaking in on him. "He suggested that such a possibility might arise, and I threatened him with all manner of things I would do to you if you refused him. So he kept silent—apparently for your sake."

"What could you do to me?" she inquired proudly.

"My dear," he answered, "without the money Curtis could bring your estates would not be of much value, and I said if—if you refused him that I—"

"Would let them remain so, I suppose," she continued mischievously.

"Yes," he answered. "So now, you see, you have separated father and son. What do you propose to do?"

The girl's eyes filled with tears as she said:

"I'm going to send for him, if he will come."

"But," queried the old gentleman, "do you want him?"

"Oh, pater," she whispered, "I never knew how much till he went away."

"Send for him, then!" he cried, delighted. "Write at once—no, telegraph!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "I'll come!"

And he did.

Annual Meeting

OF THE

Home Life Association of Canada

The Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders and Participating Policyholders of The Home Life Association of Canada was held at the offices of the Association in The Home Life Building, Thursday, January 12th, 1911, many Shareholders and Policyholders being present.

The President, Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., occupied the chair, and Mr. A. J. Walker, Secretary-Treasurer of the Association, acted as secretary of the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Stratton, President, in presenting to the meeting the Report of the Directors, said:—

I have much pleasure in submitting for your consideration the Annual Financial Statement of The Home Life Association of Canada for the year ending December 31st, 1910, accompanied with a statement of the Assets and Liabilities and a Comparative Statement for the period under review.

In so doing, it is a pleasure to be able to congratulate those interested upon a general improvement in the results of the operations of the Association—a considerably improved earning capacity of its investments and a general improvement in condition of the interests of the Association, nearly, if not all, of the departments participating in this improvement and the Association generally sharing in the prosperous financial and commercial conditions that have marked the country in the past year, and which promise to be continued in the year to come. Many of these are worthy of more specific reference.

The improved condition of the standing of the Association, as represented by its Assets, is shown by the fact that the total of Assets, including capital not subjected to call, now amount to more than two millions of dollars, the exact figures being $2,027,739.29—an increase of $158,991.80 over the figures of last year.

The invested assets of a company or corporation of a financial character change in character and form as well as amount from year to year.

At the close of 1910 the invested assets of The Home Life Association, mounting in round numbers to $1,200,000 were composed as follows:—

First mortgages on real estate, $497,415.55.
Bonds and debentures and collateral loans, $287,220.58.
Loans on the policies of the Association, $169,778.03.
Real estate owned by the Association, $158,893.28.

To this may be added cash in bank, and on deposit receipts, $82,489.93, and accounts receivable, $268.13.

During the year the mortgage account has been strengthened to the extent of nearly $100,000; the sum of $21,337 added to the total of municipal debentures and bonds, and a considerable increase has been made in loans on the policies of the Association.

The interest earning capacity of the investments of the Association are very satisfactory—mortgages realizing 7.58 per cent., bonds and debentures 5 1-3 per cent., and loans on policies 5 1-3 per cent., the average being eminently satisfactory. The Home Life Building, in which there is at present no vacancy, has maintained its revenue producing value.

The insurance in force, showing an increase of $289,799, from $5,583,901.70 to $5,872,690.70, is satisfactory as demonstrating progress. The premium income shows a corresponding increase, the figures of last year being $204,525.65, and this year $210,686.99—an increase of $6,161.34.

The legal reserves, which in last year's statement stood at $928,536.14, now total $1,047,564.39, a substantial increase of $119,028.25.

The interest ratio again shows an increase, rising this year to six and one-quarter per cent. from 5.99 per cent. in 1909, which places The Home Life Association in this regard in the front rank among insurance corporations, and indicates that the investments have been placed with care and judgment.

In the matter of death claims the showing is the best in the history of the Association for several years, the demands being substantially below the estimated expectancy of mortality, in emphasis of the importance of careful selection and acceptance of risks.

The amount paid to meet the expenses of operation is $1,920.02 less than the preceding year.

The mortgage account exhibits a continuous, prosperous and healthy condition, the interest payments being promptly met, and the security represented by our mortgages being of a sound and satisfactory character.

The sum written off office furniture, now standing on our books at $2,835.24, more than provides for depreciation, as the real value of the furniture is greater than its value as recorded in the assets.

The Home Life Building, as an asset, is gaining in its investment and net revenue producing value, a further reduction of liability to the amount of $5,000 having been made during the past year.

Loans on life policies, recognized as one of the most advantageous forms of life assurance business, have materially increased, and the interest payments on all undertakings have been well met.

At the end of the year there were unadjusted and uncompleted death claims to the amount of $4,500. The policy and practice of the Association are to pay all claims promptly on the necessary probatory documents being approved by the solicitor of the Association.

The invested assets of the Association now amount to $1,196,485.55, an increase of $154,623.31. These assets are of a character to stand the closest scrutiny in regard to safety, soundness, and earning value.

During the past year the auditors of the Shareholders have made their regular inspection and audit. The Government, through the Insurance Department, has also made its examination and inspection covering all securities held by the Association, as well as all details of its business operations. In both cases the results were in all respects satisfactory.

As you are aware, the amended Insurance Act came into force on the first of January, and the Association has prepared by conforming to its requirements, by the provision of new rate books and new policy forms, which are now in the hands of the agents.

In concluding my references to the Report and Statement before you, I feel that I am qualified in dwelling upon its generally satisfactory and encouraging character, and further justified in the confidence that in the coming year The Home Life Association will enjoy a fair degree of the prosperity which now prevails throughout the country, and promises to continue. It affords me much pleasure to move the adoption of the Report.

Mr. Jas. L. Hughes, Vice-President, in seconding the resolution adopting the Report, expressed his satisfaction at the increase in the interest rate from 3.56 per cent. six years ago to six and a quarter per cent (6¼ p.c.) in 1910, which, taken in conjunction with the unquestionable soundness of the investments, he considered ground for congratulation to all interested. Mr. Hughes further referred to the reduction in management expenses, and to the fact that the total assets for security of policyholders now exceed the two-million dollar mark.

Mr. John S. King, Vice-President, in supporting the motion of the adoption of the Report, took occasion to point out that the mortgage investments of the Company almost half a million dollars, are so placed in the different Provinces of the Dominion as to assist materially in the expansion of the Company's interests and influence, and after careful investigation he was able to state that there was no undue allocation of mortgage funds in any one section, so that in the event of adverse conditions there would be no likelihood of any great volume of investment interests being injuriously affected. Mr. King was sanguine that the ensuing year would show even more favourable results than the past, and that the Company had entered upon an era of development and prosperity.

After remarks by Rev. A. L. Gee, of Simcoe, Mr. J. K. McCutcheon, Managing Director, Dr. John S. King, Chief Medical Referee, and others, the Report was unanimously adopted.

At a meeting of the Directors held immediately at the conclusion of the General Meeting the following Shareholders' Directors were elected by the meeting:

Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P.; Mr. James L. Hughes, Chief Inspector of Public Schools, Toronto; Mr. John S. King, President Belinda Silica Company, Toronto; Mr. Jas. J. Warren, Managing Director Trusts and Guarantee Company, Toronto; Mr. D. W. Karn, Piano and Organ Manufacturer, Woodstock; Mr. J. K. McCutcheon, Managing Director, Toronto.

The following Policyholders' Directors were elected:

Mr. J. W. Lyon, Guelph, Ont.; Mr. Charles Turnbull, Galt, Ont; Mr. D. B. Broadfoot, Regina, Sask.

The following gentlemen were appointed members of the Advisory Board:—

Mr. J. S. Hough, K.C., Winnipeg; Mr James Maynard, Victoria, B.C.; Mr Ashmore Kennedy, Winnipeg; Mr. Charles May, Edmonton; Mr. S. A. Bedford, Winnipeg.

At a meeting of the Directors held immediately at the conclusion of the Annual General Meeting, the following officers were elected:

President, Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P.; Vice-Presidents, Mr. John S. King and Mr. James L. Hughes; Managing Director, Mr. J. K. McCutcheon; Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. A. J. Walker.

MOUNTED PATROL AT BORDER

Windsor, Jan. 13.—The new plan for handling the undesirable immigrant question is said to include provisions for mounted Provincial police at the border points such as Niagara Falls Windsor, etc. This will make possible a better patrol. It is well known that since the Provincial Police have been working in conjunction with the Immigration Department, hundreds of undesirables have been turned back again into the United States. The new police will have great powers and may make people go back if, in their own opinion, they think they are not wanted in Canada.

Rev. Father McColl Says "No Compromise"

That the world-wide disturbance in religious circles is having its effect in Peterborough is made plain from the tenor of a reply of which The Times has heard, made by the Rev. Father McColl to the Rev. Canon Davidson, of St. John's. It appears that a few days ago, the Canon invited the Ministerial Association of this city to dine with him. He had also sent a courteous and well-meant note of invitation to Father McColl to be his guest, but instead of accepting or declining the invitation to dine in the way customary on such occasions, the worthy priest "came back at him" in a letter that left no doubt of what he meant in the minds of those present. Amongst other things the Rev. Father McColl said that "There can be no compromise between the men in the Church and those outside of it. The warfare between the two will be one also in which kid gloves will play no part."

This attitude of attack was considered to show what we "may expect." The attack on Modernism is evidently extending to Peterborough.

General Booth may Come Over Again

Toronto, Jan. 18.—"One of the features of my work in Canada will be the attention that will be given to colonization and immigration," was the statement of Commissioner David M. Rees, the newly appointed commander of the Salvation Army in Canada.

"As yet I have no plans for the future," he said, "but my first step will be to take a trip over the district, I am in charge of.

"The general is now completely over his illness of a short time ago, and is in as good general health as can be expected of a man eighty-two years of age."

He has recently taken a trip through Denmark, and is seriously considering a visit to Canada, and the United States next fall.

At present the Salvation Army has social work under way in fifty different countries and colonies. Representatives of these places will meet in London for a Social Council in the early part of May this year.

WARSAW.

Last Wednesday two loads of young people took a trip to Mr. Wm. Douglas' Smith, where a very enjoyable evening was spent. The party arrived home about 2a .m.

The local rink is in splendid shape at present. So far we have had two hockey matches. The first Warsaw vs. Norwood went in favor of the visiting team, the score being 6 to . The last, Lakefield, St. John's am vs. Warsaw, resulted in the score of 4 to 3 in favor of Warsaw. The local players are making a splendid showing in spite of their having very little practice. Later in the season we hope for much better work.

Miss Julia Choate spent Sunday with her parents.

Miss Ida Jury is visiting her friend Miss Belle Selkirk.

Miss Drain of Norwood, is visiting her brother, Mr. Dave Drain.

A great many of our inhabitants are laid up with La Grippe, which seems to be of a most severe variety.

Almost successful meeting of the women's Institute was held last Thursday at the home of Mrs. Jos Edwards. The delegates, Miss Jury and Mrs. Hamblin, gave an excellent report of the Institute Convention held in Toronto.

Mr. Fred. Edwards of Battleford, Sask., is visiting his parents. Mr. Edwards is in the drug business in that town.

Several of the local poultry fanciers attended the fair in Peterborough. Many helpful ideas were taken advantage of in consequence.

Word has been received of the death of Mrs. C. McIntosh, a former resident of Warsaw. Mrs. McIntosh was well known in the vicinity and many friends and relatives will mourn her death.

TWENTY-FIVE MURDEROUS CONSPIRATORS SENTENCED

DR. BEATTIE NESBITT IS IN BALTIMORE

Washington, Jan. 18.—Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, former president of the Farmers' Bank, and for whom a summons has been issued in Toronto, was seen in Baltimore, forty miles from here, Monday afternoon, according to a former Canadian who has arrived in Washington. The informant stated that the doctor had arrived the same day from the West, presumably Detroit or Chicago, and has called on a number of old acquaintances.

EARL OF DUDLEY MAY BE THE MAN

London, Jan. 18.—The Duke of Connaught's appointment as a successor to Earl Grey has never been considered in official circles as a sure thing, and it is very doubtful if the Duke has ever been officially offered the appointment.

It would be no surprise to some if the Earl of Dudley, who is resigning the lieutenantship of Australia, succeeds Earl Grey.

Suggestions of direct recognition of the overseas dominions at the coronation have been conveyed to the King. One is that side by side with the Knights of the Garter is holding the canopy for the sovereigns anointing there should be four representatives of the Empire—Canada, Australia, South Africa and India.

TO PAY $6,250 FOR A SLANDER

London, Jan. 18.—Sir Algernon West, K.C.B., formerly confidential secretary and intimate friend of Mr. Gladstone, and an official of the highest distinction, to-day was sentenced to pay an award of $6,250 to his daughter-in-law, Mrs. West, in her suit against him for slander.

Mrs. West alleges that Sir Algernon had told a number of society people that her separation from his son had been brought about by her extravagance, thereby, as she claimed damaging her social position, whereas in reality, she alleges, the separation was due to her husband's misconduct.

Additional interest was given to the suit by the appearance on the stand as a witness for Mrs. West, of Mrs. Asquith, wife of the Premier, who was Dorothy Tennant, characterized by the poet Watson as "the woman of the serpent's tongue." She testified that extravagance frequently was a passport to high society.

CRIED "LONG LIVE ANARCHY" —DRAMATIC SCENE IN JAPANESE COURT.

Two Must Suffer Death—Man Who Once Lived in San Francisco and His Wife Face Extreme Penalty.

Tokio, Jan 18—Twenty-five men and one woman charged with conspiracy against the throne, and with plotting to assassinate the Crown Prince and high officials of the Empire, to-day were publicly sentenced by the Supreme Court. Twenty-four of the prisoners, including Denjiro Kotoku, who once lived in San Francisco, and his wife, were condemned to death. The other two were sent to prison, one for eleven years and the other for eight years.

The trial had been secret, but the final dramatic scene was witnessed by the diplomats and man prominent Japanese. When sentence had been pronounced one of the doomed men rose and shouted: "Baozai!" At this all of the prisoners sprang to their feet, and Kotoku, raising his hands above his head cried, "Long lite anarchy!"

There was no further demonstration and the prisoners turned quickly to their guards, and were again handcuffed and led away.

In pronouncing sentence, the chief justice read a long statement, outlining the conspiracy and said that the course of the investigation leading to the arrest of the anarchists, and subsequent trial, had been exhaustive, and proved beyond doubt the guilt of the prisoners.

SUBMARINE SANK HER CREW SAVED.

German Warship Goes to the Bottom and Failed to Come Up.

Kiel, Germany, Jan. 17—The German submarine "U3" sank to-day in Heikendorf Bay, in the harbor of Kiel. The number of men on board was not known.

The submarine salvage ship Vulkan, equipped with powerful cranes, and other apparatus for the raising of submerged vessels, was sent to the assistance of the submarine.

The "U3" was built in Danzig, in 1909, and has a displacement of 300 tons. In November in company with submarine "U4" the vessel made the passage from Cuxhaven round the Shaw to Kiel, a distance of 540 miles in about 40 hours, without a convoy.

All the crew were unhurt, and they had air enough in the tanks to keep them alive for several hours. They kept in constant communication with the surface and did what they could to direct their rescue.

The accident demonstrates the value of the newly invented submarine telephone attachment with which all German torpedo boats are now equipped. This phone arrangement is attached to the outside of the boat just forward of the tower. As soon as the U3 sank it was detached by the officer inside of the disabled craft, and when the buoy reached the surface it was picked up by one of the other vessels that had been participating in the manoeuvers, and connection made.

MACHINERY DISABLED.

The officer in command of the disabled craft reported that his machinery was disabled, so that it could not be repaired or the engines started. There was no leakage of gasoline, however, as the result of the accident and the air inside was all right.

The initial attempts to attach chains to haul the boat up failed, and a big derrick was sent from the ship yard with other workers.

The submarine was raised later and the crew rescued.

Women and Children Were Barred From Trial

ALL CHILDREN ARE ALSO SHUT OUT FROM COURT ROOM IN SCHENK CASE.

Evidence Not Printable—Dr. Ackerman Declares that Blue Line on Schenk's Gums Was Caused by Poisoning.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 18.—All women and children will be barred hereafter from the trial of Mrs. L. F. Schenk. This was announced by Judge Jordan in court to-day after a great deal of testimony unfit to print had been given in examination by medical witnesses.

Among those excluded from the court room by order of Judge Jordan was a fifteen-year-old girl, who had stood before the court room door for nearly an hour waiting admission before court convened. Three boys were also banished from the room in spite of their protests that they were old enough to attend.

AN IMPOSING LINE.

There was an imposing line up of medical and scientific men upon the prosecution's side of the counsel tables when the trial was resumed, six doctors and chemical experts being seated beside Prosecuting Attorney Handlan.

Mrs. Schenk showed few traces of worry over yesterday's blows against the defence when she hurried into the room. She engaged in a ten-minute conference with her attorneys and seemed cheerful over the day's outlook.

Dr. L. Edward Burns, an expert diagnostician, who answered a 1,500 word hypothetical question yesterday by declaring under oath that Schenk had been poisoned, was the first witness called to the stand.

His cross-examination was immediately commenced by counsel for Mrs. Schenk, and the testimony advanced was mostly of a technical nature.

Attorney J. P. P. O'Brien, counsel for the defence, conducted the cross-examination, and his knowledge of medical terms and medicine itself amazed those in the court room. He propounded the most technical questions, following these up with detailed explanations.

Mrs. Schenk, a little pale, listened alertly and looked approvingly towards her lawyer as he went deeper into the medical questioning.

Mr. Handlan again took the witness, asking:

"Did John O. Schenk ever have an incurable disease?"

"Not that I could see," replied the witness.

The witness said that the amount of arsenic taken by Schenk in medicines was not sufficient to produce the effect marked upon him.

DR. ACKERMAN CALLED.

Dr. Gregory Ackerman was then recalled to the stand.

"In your opinion was the blue line on Schenk's gums caused by lead poison in the system?" Dr. Ackerman was asked.

"Yes."

"Why did you instruct Mr. Schenk to take meals only at the hospital and none from his home?"

"I reasoned that lead poison could only come from his home."

Dr. Ackerman declared he was in favor of Schenk's removal to a hospital because his instructions as to his treatment were not being carried out at the home.

NOT AN ARSENIC FIEND.

The witness then told upon cross-examination, as to forming the conclusion that Schenk was suffering from poison and informing Dr. F. L. Happ of his suspicions. He denied that there was any indications of Schenk being an arsenic fiend.

Is Charged with Attempted Murder

Huntsville, Ont., Jan. 18.—Joseph Prentice, a farmer living in Chaffey township, is in the toils here, charged with threatening to murder a Mrs. Stahls. His preliminary hearing will come up on Friday. Prentice has been living with a three-year-old child in a log hut, and absolutely refused to leave the house, being constantly on the watch for strangers. He kept a loaded gun on the premises and had threatened the police. By a piece of strategy his arrest was made by Chief Watson.

Other charges are pending against Prentice, one being that he killed and ate a heifer belonging to a neighbor named Martin. 6

Mr. Justice MacMahon Passed Away Yesterday

Well-Known Member of the High Court Had Been Ill For a Long Time.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—Mr. Justice MacMahon died at two o'clock this morning at his late residence, 185 Beverley street. Though he had been in failing health for some months, death came suddenly, a heart attack hastening the end.

The late Hon. Hugh MacMahon was a son of the late Hugh MacMahon, public land surveyor, a native of Ireland, and descended from eminent Irishmen. Surveyor MacMahon came to Canada in 1819, and Mr. Justice MacMahon was born in Guelph on March 6th, 1836. He was educated by his scholarly father, entered the Board of Works Department in his 17th year, and under the late Lieut.-Col. Gallaway, C.E., as assistant engineer, was engaged on the survey for the Ottawa ship canal. Commencing the study of law in 1857 he was called to the bar in 1864, and practiced at Brantford for five years with his brother, afterwards Judge Thomas B. MacMahon of Norfolk.

Hugh MacMahon moved to London and their achieved distinction. As criminal lawyer he will be remembered as defence counsel at the sensational Biddulph murder trial. He was also prominent as a civil lawyer and from time to time was associated with the late Christopher Robinson and the late Dalton McCarthy in cases involving constitutional law. He was made a K.C. by the Ontario Government in 1876, and in 1885 the Dominion Government honored him in a like manner. He was a liberal candidate on two occasions for the House of Commons, and in 1883 he came to Toronto. He continued his practice here until November 30, 1887, when he was elevated to the bench as a puisne judge of the common Pleas division of the Ontario High Court. He presided at the Bigehall trial in Woodstock in 1890.

In religion Mr. Justice MacMahon was a Roman Catholic. In 1864 he married Isabel Janet, eldest daughter of the late Simon Mackenzie, of Belleville. One son, D'Arcy MacMahon survives, and Mrs. MacMahon is also living.

Was He Killed on Way to the Camp?

Sherbrooke, Que., Jan. 18.—No trace has yet been found of Mr. W. F. Pope, the missing Bromptonville merchant. His coat was found yesterday morning by a passerby and brought to Bromptonville. It was covered with blood on the inside. Pope's hat was also found. He received a letter on the day of his disappearance, stating that a man who owed him money, was about to leave the country and advised him to go at once to Stoke, where this man worked. He started for the camp, but never reached there.

It is now feared that the letter was a decoy and that he was enticed away for the purpose of robbing him or for murder. That he has been murdered is a general opinion, as a blood-stained club was found not far from the scene where a bloody fight is thought to have taken place. High Constable Mie is working on the case.

EMPTIED THE WINE INTO THE STREETS

Paris, Jan. 18.—Troops were despatched to Damery, department of Marne to-day to restore order, following rioting when discontented Viticulture workers raided the cellars of wine growers yesterday, destroying vats, emptying 1,600 gallons of wine into the streets, and 2,150 bottles of champagne into the River Marne.

Many of the rioters partook freely of the wines and champagnes that flowed in rivers through the streets, and the violence became so turbulent that it was feared a number would be killed and the Government was appealed to for military aid.

Some of the streets near the wine cellars were filled with the wine from curb to curb.

MORE PEACHES FOR ENGLAND.

The experiment made by the Department of Agriculture last summer in sending over to the English market peaches that had been specially packed is endorsed in a review of the fruit market by The London Daily Telegraph, which writes as follows:

"Fresh peaches from Ontario completed the trio of new introductions. The experiment of importing the delicate fruit from the Niagara district was quite a success, and colonial growers and shippers have expressed themselves as perfectly satisfied with the manner in which their produce was handled at Covent Gardens. It so happened that these peaches arrived at a time when the home-grown were exceptionally scarce, and on that account favorable markets were met. Next year large quantities are expected."

THE ANGORA INDUSTRY

F. P. Fletcher Will Raise Goats in Alberta Province

Fergus P. Fletcher, Alberta, is bringing the nucleus of a herd of Angoras from Montana. "There are many people in Alberta who regard the Angora as a beast with great possibilities in this country," he said, "and I am one of them. They are not only invaluable for clearing scrubby country, but they can be run with great profit on any piece of poor land. I have seen a herd of goats put on land that was absolutely useless, and they have improved it that much that it is now well prepared for other stock or grain growing; there has been an ever increasing demand for this in the past few years, and the prices realised in London England, during the years from 1905 to 1910 have been very gratifying. And there is no fear of an over production. The Angora industry is only in its infancy, but it is full of great possibilities, and when the general public become educated to eat goats' flesh the industry will grow fast. In all the big restaurants of Europe, England and the United States, the flesh of the Angora is deemed a great delicacy, and the demand for it is increasing all the time."

Mr. Fletcher expects to pass through the city again in about ten days with forty goats with which to start his herd.

OATS FIVE FEET HIGH

Mr. Alf. Cooper brought in some oats from his farm in Neebing township, near Fort William. The oats, which are green, stand five feet high and are well headed out with full kernels of grain. Six weeks ago he thought of ploughing it down as useless, but since then it has grown to its present size. He has thirty acres of such oats and his wheat is equally good.

SCIENTIFIC MATING

Millionaire Wants Yale to Teach Doctrine of Race Culture

New York, Aug. 20.—The time has come in the opinion of W. E. D. Stokes when the science of eugenics should be taught at Yale. In a letter to President Hadley, the millionaire suggests that study of race culture and the application of its principles to marriage will lead to the physical and moral betterment of the human race. Mr. Stokes submits that by scientific methods the value of horses, cattle and poultry has increased. Then why not, he argues, try to improve humanity through similar knowledge? He predicts the day when it will be a public disgrace to be the parents of any but healthy, intelligent, well formed children.

THE RED YEAR

LOUIS TRACY.

man I one other object in riding to Rai Bareilly. A certain Nazarene, Malcolm by name, an officer of the 3rd Cavalry, was bidden by Larrence to make for Allahabad and seek help. The story runs that the Nazarenes are mustering there for a last stand ere we drive them into the sea. This Malcolm-sahib—"

"Enough!" said the moulvie, fiercely, for his self-love was wounded at learning that the rebel messenger joined him with the mob. "We have him here. He is in safe keeping when he is in the hands of Ahmed Ullah!"

"What!" exclaimed the newcomer with a mighty oath. "Are you the saintly Moulvie of Fyzabad?"

"Whom else—then did you expect to find?"

"You, indeed, O revered one. But not here. My orders were, once I had secured the Nazarene, to send urgently to Fyzabad and bid you hurry to Lucknow with all speed."

"Ha! Sayst thou, friend. Who gave thee this message?"

"One whom thou will surely listen to. Yet these things are not for every man to hear. We must speak of them apart."

The moulvie was appeased. Nay more, his ambition was fired.

"Come with me into the house. You are in need of food and rest. Come! We can talk while you eat."

He drew nearer, but a woman's voice was raised from behind a screen in one of the rooms.

"Tarry yet a minute, friend. I would learn more of events in Luck now. Tell us more fully what has taken place there?"

"The Begum of Oudh must be obeyed," said Ahmed Ullah with a warning glance at the other. He was met with a villainous and intriguing look that would have satisfied Machiavelli, but the officer bowed low before the screen.

"I am, indeed, honored to be the bearer of good tidings to royal ears," said he. "Doubtless I should have been entrusted with letters for your highness were not the city in some confusion owing to the fighting."

"Who commands our troops?" came the sharp demand.

"At present, your highness, the Nawab of Rampur represents the King of Oudh."

"The Nawab of Rampur! That cannot be tolerated. Ahmed Ullah!"

"I am here," growled the moulvie, smiling sourly.

"We must depart within the hour. Let my litter be prepared, and send men on horseback to provide relays of carriers every ten miles. Delov no! The matter presses."

There could be no mistaking the agitation of the hidden speaker. That an admitted rival of her father's dynasty should be even the nominal leader of the revolt was not to be endured. The mere suggestion of such a thing was gall and wormwood. None realized better than this arch-priestess of cabal that a predominating influence gained at the outset of a new regime might never be weakened by those who were shut out by circumstances from a share in the control of events. Even the fanatical moulvie gasped at this intelligence, though his shrewd wit taught him that the risaldar had not exchanged glances with him without good reason.

"Come, then," said he, "and eat. I have much occupation, and it will free thy hands if I see to the hanging of the Feringhi forthwith."

"Nay, that cannot be," was the cool reply, as the two entered the building. "I would not have ridden so hard through the night for the mere stringing up of one Nazarene. By the holy Kaaba, we gave dozens of them a speedier death yesterday."

"What other errand hast thou? The matter touches only the Nazarene's attempt to reach Allahabad, I suppose?"

"That is a small thing. Our brothers at Cawnpore may have secured Allahabad and other towns in the Doab long ere to-day. This Frank comes back with me to Lucknow. If I bring him alive I earn a jaghir, if dead, only a few golden mohurs."

"Thy words are strange, brother."

"Not so strange as the need that this Feringhi should live till he reaches Lucknow. He hath in his keeping certain papers that concern the Roshinara Begum of Delhi, and he must be made to confess their whereabouts. So far as that goes, what is the difference between a tree in Rai Bareilly and a tree in Lucknow?"

"True, if the affair presses. Nevertheless, to those who follow me I may have the bestowing of many jaghirs."

"I will follow thee with all haste, O holy one," was the answer, "but a field in a known village is larger than a township in an unknown kingdom. Let me secure this jaghir first. O worthy of honor, and I shall come quickly to thee for the others."

"How came it that Nawab of Rampur assumed the leadership?" inquired Ahmed Ullah, his mind reverting to the graver topic of the rebellion.

The other scowled sarcastically.

"He is of no account," he muttered. "Was I mistaken in thinking that thou didst not want all my budget opened for a woman? He who gave me a message for thee was the moullah who dwells near the Imambara. Dost thou not know him? Ghazi-ud-din. He sent me, 'Tell the Moulvie of Fyzabad that he is wanted—he will understand,' said he. And now, when I have eaten, lead me to the Feringhi. Leave him to me. Within two days I shall have more news for thee."

The name of Ghazi-ud-din, a firebrand of the front rank in Lucknow, proved to Ahmed Ullah that his opportunity had come. He gave orders that the wants of the cavalry officer and his horse were to be attended to, while he himself bustled off to prepare for an immediate journey.

When the Begum and the moulvie departed for Lucknow they were accompanied by nearly the whole of their retinue. Two men were left to assist the risaldar in taking care of the prisoner, and these two vowed by the Prophet that they never met such a swashbuckler as the stranger, for he used strange oaths that delighted them and told stories of the sacking of Lucknow that made them thgle with envy.

Oddly enough, he was very anxious that the Nazarene's horse should be recovered, and was so pleased to hear that Nejdi was caught in a field on the outskirts of the town and brought in during the afternoon that he promised his assistants a handful of gold mohurs apiece when they reached Lucknow.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Roselyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. Alf. Hodgson, purchasing agent of the Wheeling Mould and Foundry Co., Wheeling, W. Va., is spending a few weeks vacation with his mother, 208 Rubidge street.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Miers, D. Sc. F.R.S., Waynflete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing auriferous gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as 'spinel twins.' Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least so far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, coalesce quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

THE DIFFICULTIES OF OUR AIRMEN

Some of the Troubles They Have to Overcome—Why the Flying Machines Fly

The question that most naturally occurs to you in considering the aeroplane is—"Why, seeing that it is heavier than air, does it not fall? Why does it stay aloft? It is considerably heavier than air, and on the same principle that iron will not swim you would naturally expect that it would refuse to soar. It is the air pressure beneath the plane that keeps it up. A balloon can remain stationary over a given spot in a calm, but an aeroplane must constantly move if it is to remain in the air. The monoplanes and biplanes on which our foremost aviators have been making and breaking so many records of late are somewhat in the same position as a skater on thin ice. The skater must move fast enough to reach a new section of ice before he falls; the aeroplane must move fast enough to reach a new section of air before it falls. Hence the aeroplane is constantly struggling with gravitation.

The simplest and most familiar example of an aeroplane is the kite of our boyhood days. We all remember how we kept it aloft by holding it against the wind or by running with it if there happened to be only a gentle breeze. When the wind died down or the string broke the kite fell. Above all things, it was necessary to hold the kite's surface toward the wind—an end which we sometimes accomplished with a string. The eagle is an animated kite without the string, but it keeps its outstretched wings to the wind by muscular power. If we can find a substitute for the string, some device, in other words, which will enable us to hold the kite in the proper direction, we have invented a flying machine. The pull or the thrust of an engine-driven propellor is the accepted substitute for the string of a kite or the muscles of an eagle. The propeller creates an artificial wind, as it were, to keep the aeroplane up.

Maintaining Balance

Of course, as you will readily understand, there are many other things to be considered besides mere propelling machinery. Of these the first in importance is certainly the very difficult art of balancing the plane so that it will glide on an even keel. As a matter of fact, even birds find it hard to maintain their balance. In the constant endeavor to balance himself a hawk sways from side to side as he soars like an acrobat on a tight rope. Occasionally, as you may have noticed, a bird will catch the wind on the top of his wing, with the result that he will capsize and fall some distance before he can recover himself. If the living aeroplanes of nature find the feat of balancing so difficult, is it any wonder that men have been killed in endeavoring to discover their secret?

The whole art of maintaining the side-to-side balance of an aeroplane consists in keeping the centre of gravity and the centre of air pressure on the same vertical line. If the two should not at least approximately coincide the aeroplane is capsized.

There are obviously two ways of maintaining side-to-side balance—one by constantly shifting the centre of gravity, the other by constantly shifting the centre of air-pressure. The first method involves ceaseless flash-like movement on the part of the aviator; for by shifting his body he shifts the centre of gravity.

The aeroplane must be balanced not only from side to side, but fore and aft as well. The same necessity exists in the old-fashioned single-surface kite. To give it the necessary fore-and-aft stability we used to adorn it with a long tail of knotted strips of paper or rags. If the tail was not heavy enough the kite dived erratically, and sometimes met its destruction by colliding with a tree. To ensure longitudinal stability many aeroplane flying machines are similarly provided with a tail, which consists generally of one or more plane surfaces. Some aeroplanes are, however, tailless, but usually they are less stable than the tailed variety.

Commencing a Flight

In order to fly an aeroplane, like a kite or a soaring bird, must rise in the very teeth of the wind. What is more, it must be in motion before it can fly. How this preliminary motion was to be obtained was a problem that long baffled the flying machine inventor. Eagles, vultures, and other soaring birds launch themselves either by leaping from the limb of a tree, or the edge of a cliff, or by running along the ground with wings outspread until they have acquired sufficient speed.

From this we can readily understand why a vulture can be confined in a small cage which is entirely open at the top.

To get up preliminary speed many methods have been adopted. One of the earliest was by running the machine down an inclined track. Many aviators, however, mount their aeroplanes on bicycle wheels, and, like the eagle, run along the ground for a short distance. Just as a soaring bird uses his legs in leaping in the air or running on the ground to start his flight, and also in alighting, so most aeroplanes alight with the bicycle wheels that serve them during the brief moments of launching. Sometimes, however, special alighting devices are provided.

The problem of steering an aeroplane when it is launched is solved by two sets of rudders. A steamboat is a vehicle that travels in two directions only, hence it requires only a single vertical rudder, which serves to guide it from side to side. An aeroplane moves not only from side to side, but up and down as well. Hence, it is equipped with a vertical rudder similar to that of a steamboat, and also with a horizontal rudder, which serves to alter its course up or down, and which is becoming more widely known as an elevator. Fore-and-aft stability is attained in tailless machines by manipulation of this elevator. Even in tailed machines its use for that purpose is almost imperative.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings read like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

Treasury stock in the Mexico Mining, Refining and Exploration company can be bought today for less than ever it can be again. BROWN AND JACKSON

By Marian G. Wilson

Brown and Jackson the two bookkeepers looked admiringly after Miss Elsie Leslie the first morning she came into the office.

Brown and Jackson had been good friends up to that time. It was their custom to go out to luncheon together, and, after lunch, they would foregather in front of the big building in which they passed most of their waking hours and smoke cigars and for considerable spaces of time say nothing in a companionable way, and everything was perfectly serene and beautiful.

However, one day towards the end of the week that brought Miss Elsie Leslie into the office, Brown made an elaborate toilet about ten minutes before luncheon time, and when Jackson looked up and said "I say, old chap, hold on a minute, I want to add up this column before I go," Brown made a gargling sound in his throat and bolted unsociably. When he returned Jackson was haughty, but Brown was too full of content to be affected by mere surface coldness.

"That new place over in Market Street is a fine place to eat," he jubilated. "You ought to taste their oyster fritters."

Brown removed his cuffs and stood them up neatly on the ledge at the back of the high desk at which he and Jackson worked. "Would you like to come with me there some day?"

Jackson extracted the pen he had been using from the penholder and threw it viciously on the floor. "Fine place for mugs to eat, I should say," he sneered. "I've been there. I'm not the sort to be done twice."

Brown looked rather crestfallen for a moment, but recovered himself quickly. "That so?" he queried. "Well, maybe I didn't notice things very much. When a fellow has good company it don't make so much difference what he eats. You see, Miss Leslie happened to be over there, and we sat at the same table."

Jackson looked more contemptuous and Brown climbed up on his high chair, humming in an exasperating way, and went to work.

The devotion of Brown and Jackson to Miss Leslie became the main interest of the office force before many weeks had slipped by. They would work glumly side by side during the day, apparently oblivious of each other's movements, but as five-thirty o'clock and closing time approached each would keep an uneasy eye turned upon the other.

They knew the exact moment at which Miss Leslie left her desk and began the somewhat prolonged process of engulfing herself in her hat. Shortly thereafter the two book-keepers would begin buckling on their coffs and pulling down their sleeves in preparation for departure.

Thus matters went on until the holiday season arrived. Miss Leslie left the office late in August and for several days Brown and Jackson were unable to conceal the fact that her absence had made life seem for the time a desert. About Thursday, however, Brown entered the office in the morning whistling blithely, and every now and then a fatuous smile would overspread the features of Jackson, while occasionally his hand would steal to the region of his breast pocket.

Towards noon Brown broke the long silence that had until then hung over them like a pall.

"I'm thinking," he said, clearing his throat consciously, "that I'll go over to Douglas this Saturday. A lady friend of mine says it's a fine place."

Jackson looked at him suspiciously. "I was thinking of going over there myself," he responded. "I know a lady—that is—there's some folks spending their holidays over there, that are anxious to have me visit them."

Brown clasped his hands behind his head and leaned back in his chair, curling his legs backward about the round.

"Miss Leslie says she's having a grand time" he volunteered.

"Who told you?" Jackson glared at his erstwhile friend with the glare of a man-eating tiger. "I suppose you've got nerve enough to say Miss Leslie's been writing to you."

Brown glanced at him kindly from under his raised elbow. "Well, if you're so anxious to know," he said, "she did." He fixed his eyes rapturously on a black spot on the wall. "She says there are not many fellows there, but she has a great time taking long walks by herself, and she says there's a beautiful little place up on the head where a person can go and sit and think about the folks they like best and—"

"You don't say," gulped Jackson. Then he stopped abruptly.

Brown looked at him politely, then resumed: "And she says there's a good many pretty girls."

"Did she wind up," asked Jackson, "with a piece of poetry like this:

"When this you see remember me,
For I shall always think of thee'?"

Brown bristled up like a turkey-cock.

"You've been reading my letter," he asserted, angrily.

For answer Jackson drew a lavender colored envelope from his pocket.

"You can read it," he said. "I expect there are no secrets in it."

For a space there was silence as Brown turned the letter back and forth, up and down, showing plainly his familiarity with the combination. Then he handed it back to Jackson looking rather angry, slightly amused, and at the same time thoroughly crestfallen.

"They're duplicates. That's a sure thing," he said. "But she hasn't got the first principles of economy. She might have used carbon copies on a couple of great big minnies like us."

Nothing more was said, but at luncheon time Brown stretched his arms above his head and gave a yawn that seemed to include Jackson in a friendly way.

"Ready to eat?" he asked, as he lowered his arms and reached for his hat. "I feel like having a sandwich and a cup of coffee myself."

Jackson nodded and the two went out together.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities; and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

FORTY MEN WERE KILLED IN MINE EXPLOSION--360 CUT THROUGH WALL

Warsaw, Jan. 20.—Four hundred miners were entombed alive today and forty instantly killed by an explosion in the Casimir coal mine at Sosnowice on the Russo-Prussian frontier. Fire broke out following the explosion, cutting off the escape by the main shaft, but 360 cut their way through a wall separating them from a cross tunnel and came out alive. Rescue parties that were able to enter the mine after the fire had raged for several hours found forty men dead, their bodies badly mutilated.

Negligence of the mine owners to apply proper safety devices was responsible for the disaster and the arrest of three of the owners was ordered by the Government officials who arrived on the scene and directed the work of rescue.

Rioting broke out among the rescued miners and the relatives of the men who were killed and soldiers were called to prevent an attack on the mine owners when they were taken into custody.

A Monument to The Soldiers of 1812

BRONZE AND STONE MEMORIAL OF THE CANADIAN VICTORIES IN QUEEN'S PARK.

For Centenary of Peace—Large Deputation, Representing Many Places Sees Sir James Whitney.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—A deputation of over 100 prominent men and women from all parts of the Province, and a dozen dusky representatives of the Six Nations Indians, waited upon Premier Whitney at 2.30 this afternoon to urge the erection of a monument near the Parliament Buildings, in commemoration of the century-old Canadian victories in the war of 1812-15. The arrangements for the interview were made by Colonel William Hamilton Merritt, who was also one of the chief spokesmen. The deputation was representative of military regiments, societies of various kinds, the Orange Order, the Sons of England, Historical Clubs, and Daughters of the Empire, as well as the twelve chiefs from the Six Nations Indian tribes.

"More than 200 petitions have been sent in to the Government from organizations of the military, historical, national, patriotic, or similar character from all parts of Ontario," said one of the speakers. "And as a result of this we have good reason to believe that the Government looks with favor upon the project of a suitable memorial to the heroes that fell in 1812-15, and a lasting record of the victories which they won."

Sir James thanked the delegates for their patriotic motives that had prompted their action, and promised that the important matter would be most carefully considered by the Government.

TOOK THE ADVICE OF HER FRIENDS

AND DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS MADE MRS. PAINCHAUD WELL.

She Inherited Ill-Health From Her Parents, and for Seven Years Was a Sufferer From Kidney and Heart Trouble.

Whitworth, Pemiscouta Co., Que., Jan. 20.—(Special)—That she took the advice of her friends and used Dodd's Kidney Pills is the reason Mrs. Julien Painchaud of this place gives for the perfect health that shows in her every movement.

"I inherited ill-health from my parents," Mrs. Painchaude says in an interview. "For seven years my heart and Kidneys bothered me. I was always tired and nervous. I could not sleep. My eyes had dark circles round them, and were puffed and swollen.

"I could hardly do my housework when I was advised to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. One box relieved me of pain, and six boxes made me perfectly well."

Every woman who is feeling fagged tired and wornout, should use Dodd's Kidney Pills. They cure the Kidneys, and every woman's health depends on her Kidneys. Healthy Kidneys mean pure blood, and pure blood carries new life to run down organs which supply the body with energy.

If you're a suffering woman ask your friends. They'll tell you out of their own experience to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Father McColl's Letter to Canon Davidson

Below will be found the reply to Rev. Canon Davidson's invitation to the tea given by Canon Davidson, to which the members of the local Ministerial Association were invited. With the concurrence of both Father McColl and Canon Davidson, We copy the letter from a local contemporary. Canon Davidson is reported to have said that "the letter was received and interpreted in the most friendly way as was natural. It was not received until the day following the Ministerial tea, and was not shown, being treated as a private communication. It is to be hoped that the supposed extract was not intended as a quotation. It would seem to have been built up from the kid-glove phrase, which was quoted merely as a spicy expression in a private conversation with a friend."

Peterborough, Jan. 12, 1911.

The Very Rev. Canon Davidson,
The Rectory,
Peterborough,—

My Dear Canon,—

I received your kind invitation to take tea with you this evening. I must say that I appreciate your good will very much indeed, and deeply regret that circumstances will not permit me to take advantage of the pleasure of your hospitality. I have always had a very high opinion of you personally, and I am convinced you do your work ably and conscientiously, and in a manner that can give no offence to any person, however sensitive, who may differ from you in religious belief. I am grateful, therefore, to have this opportunity of expressing to you my sentiments of sincere appreciation. It is our desire to live in peace and harmony with our separated brethren, and I have never conscientiously done anything to disturb such relationship.

I have never been the aggressor, though it is true I am always ready to defend our Church and people against unjust attacks and misrepresentation. That I look upon as a duty. We love our religion, and we love our King and country, and we are loyal to both the one and the other. It is, therefore, a deadly insult to us, especially in this enlightened age, to have our religious belief misrepresented, or our fidelity to the principles of British liberty impugned. Against all such, who are worth noticing, we are ever ready to use the lawful weapon of self-defence, and when we do so, kid gloves form no part of our accoutrements.

But as regards yourself, dear Canon we have not the slightest reason to complain. On the contrary, we have every reason to be grateful for the kind consideration we have always received from one, we know to be not only a cultured gentleman, but a man with a kind and generous heart as well.

Thanking you for your remembrance of me when inviting your guests, believe me

Very sincerely yours,
W. J. McCOLL.

SERIOUS RIOTING

Men March Through Barcelona Waving Red Banners and Throwing Stones.

Madrid, Jan. 20.—Martial law probably will be declared in Barcelona within twenty-four hours as a result of rioting in progress to-day following the declaration of a general strike. The municipal guard and troops in the Barcelona barracks were unable to withstand the frenzied men and women to-day who marched through the streets waving red banners, and throwing stones, crying "Give us bread," and "Down with the King." A number of arrests were made and half a dozen of the rioters were badly slashed by the municipal guard, who charged the rioters with drawn swords.

Mr. Webb and Mrs. Webb, Rev. Mr. Henderson and Mrs. Henderson, Rev. Mr. Carpenter, Rev. Mr. Gregory, Rev. Mr. Trumpour, Rev. Mr. Brown, Rev. Mr. Coon and Mrs. Coon, Rev. A GILBERT WHITE STORY

Thomas Hoar, the devoted servant upon whom Gilbert White, the naturalist, depended to carry out his garden plans and to look after his comfort in many ways, was noted for his exact ness. H. C. Shelley, in "Gilbert White and Selbourne," gives an amusing illustration:—

There was one occasion when Thomas came to report, "Please, sir, I've been and broke a glass."

"Broke a glass, Thomas! How did you do that?"

"I'll show you, sir," he rejoined, as he disappeared for a moment. Returning with a glass in his hand, he let it fall on the floor, remarking:

"That's how I broke it, sir."

"There, go along, Thomas; you are a great goose," said his master, adding to himself, "and I was as great a one for asking such a foolish question."—Youth's Companion.

WATCHMAN'S TERRIBLE DEATH

A fatal explosion, the cause of which is a mystery, occurred at the Prospect Mills of Messrs. Joseph Hoyle and Son, woollen manufacturers, Longwood, England. An engine tender, named Bray, had arrived at midnight to see that all was right with the boilers, when there was a terrific explosion and Bray had to flee from steam and boiling water. An investigation disclosed the dead body of the night watchman Hesley, terribly scalded, one of the coupling pipes of the boiler having burst.

A TERRIBLE BATTLE FOR LIFE ON A BURNING STEAMER

The Terrified Passengers Watch Flames Consume Steamer

Thrilling Experience and Rescue on Southern Seas---Ninety-Four Persons were Rescued and Three were Killed in the Struggle

Albany, West Australia, Jan. 20.—The steamer Parisiana has been destroyed by fire at sea. Three of the passengers on board were killed and the remainder, ninety-four in number, together with the crew, were landed here to-day by a steamer which took them off after five days' fight with the flames. The flames broke on the seventh of December.

The battle against the flames was fought until the 13th, the crew working in relays. The fire gradually ate its way through the cargo to the wooden structure. Attention was attracted to the burning vessel by the flames which were visible for more than 150 miles at sea.

The Parisiana was due at Melbourne about the first of January and fears for her safety led to orders being posted to maritime circles for ships to keep a keen watch for her.

IN COMPLETE COLLAPSE.

The passengers, many of whom were taken on at Port Said, were in a state of complete exhaustion from exertion and fright when they were taken off the vessel. They had worked night and day helping the members of the crew fight the growing fire, but the progress of the flames were so rapid that it became apparent that all on board would have to the boats in open sea. The boats were being lowered when the rescuing steamer came along from New York.

The Parisiana was built at Newcastle, England, in 1909, being a comparatively new vessel. She was steel built and with screw propellers and of modern type.

Her hailing port was west from Hartlepool, England.

Requested That the Bridge be Completed

Mr. R. Pinchin, manager of the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., which has purchased the boats and property of the Otonabee Navigation Co., wrote to Mr. Carew of Lindsay asking him to exercise his influence in having the town bridge, over the Lindsay River, completed. The company wishes to give a better steamboat service this year and it is very hard to do this until the bridge in question is completed, as the boats are unable to be turned with safety at the proper dock.

The company intends establishing an excursion business between Lindsay and Port Perry, also a better boat service between Lindsay and Sturgeon Point, Fenelon Falls, and into Lake Simcoe ports.

It is hoped that the proper authorities will take hold of this matter and have the bridge completed that the Trent Canal may be made use of.

General Elections Probably Next Year

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—Senator Landry was informed by Sir Richard Cartwright in the Senate yesterday, that the present Parliament would by Statute expire on December 3, 1913. There was power to dissolve Parliament before that date, and Hon. Mr. Brodeur was within the law of the land in making the statement that the general election would take place in 1912.

Lured Young Girls By Good Positions

Washington, Jan. 20.—A profitable white slave traffic that had its inception within the very shadows of the national capitol and extended to the twenty-four cities over the country, has been revealed by raids conducted here on manicuring and massage parlors. Six young women are being held in the city jail, while active search is being made for the man who has conducted the system and has enriched himself by the illicit traffic.

HOW GAME WAS WORKED.

Innocent girls of tender years have been lured into these resorts, the police allege, by newspaper advertisements calling for "manicurists" and by promises of munificent pecuniary reward after a preparatory course limited to two or three days. Those possessing pretty faces and comely figures are then turned into account, and shifted from city to city, as long as there is an advantage in retaining them. Eventually they are cut adrift to shift for themselves.

This new system received its first exposure in Pittsburg last month, when a "doctor," Otton Higenbach, and several of his girls, including an "instructress," were arrested and fined.

Orillia in Bad Shape Town Has No Power

Orillia, Jan. 20.—A very unfortunate accident happened at the power house, Ragged Rapids, shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when the flume of the large generator in the Orillia power plant burst and flooded the power house. The men in the building narrowly escaped being drowned. Power may be off for two weeks.

The town council held a special meeting last night, and much needed supplies were sent to Ragged Rapids early this morning. Town Engineer Greenwood is at Ragged Rapids and will remain there until Saturday.

LIVED UNDER THE SAME ROOF WITH HER DIVORCED HUSBAND

Laporte Ind., Jan. 20.—The death at Plymouth last night of Mrs Luther Jonnson revealed the fact that for twenty-five years she had lived under the same roof with her divorced husband and legal spouse.

When the wife and first husband separated twenty-five years ago, it was with the understanding that he could live under the same roof the rest of his years.

The wife again married, but the compact of a quarter of a century ago was kept, and to-day it was revealed that Mrs. Johnson had also made provision in her will for the burial expenses of the man she first loved.

The Railroaders Left the Switch Open

A fast game of hockey was played between the Pillpounders and the Railroaders last night. It appealed to the spectators in that there was nearly no roughness, only one penalty being handed out. Charlie Curtis refereed very satisfactorily. The Pillpounders rushed in four goals and Macafee went to sleep in his net with the result that the Railroaders jammed the rubber past him three times before he woke up. In the second half the combination of the Pillpounders was the feature of the game. When the bell sounded for the finish the score was 7—3 in favor of the dope-mixers. A spectator was heard to murmur that the Railroaders had left the switch open.

They lined up as follows:

HOME FAT REDUCER.

Works Rapidly and Safely—Requires No Exercising and Allows You to Eat What You Like—Cut This Out.

For the benefit of those who wish to reduce their flesh quickly and safely we will give the receipt and directions in full for a simple household remedy that can be obtained at trifling cost from any good drug store; ½ ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4½ ounces Peppermint Water. All three are cheap and wholesome, but you should take care to get an unbroken package so that you get Marmola and not a substitute. When you get home mix the three together in a large bottle and take one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Follow these directions and you will have the best fat reducer that money can buy. It will take off the flesh at the rate of at least two pounds a week without disarranging the stomach or causing wrinkles, while, best of all, no exercising or dieting is required to help it out. You can get results and at the same time take things easy and eat what you like—as much as you like—and whenever you like.

FORTY MEN WERE KILLED IN MINE EXPLOSION--360 CUT THROUGH WALL

Warsaw, Jan. 20.—Four hundred miners were entombed alive today and forty instantly killed by an explosion in the Casimir coal mine at Sosnowice on the Russo-Prussian frontier. Fire broke out following the explosion, cutting off the escape to the main shaft, but 360 cut their way through a wall separating them from a creat gunnel and came out alive. Rescue parties that were able to enter the mine after the fire had raged for several hours found forty men dead, their bodies badly mutilated.

Negligence of the mine owners to apply proper safety devices was responsible for the disaster and the arrest of three of the owners was ordered by the Government officials who arrived on the scene and directed the work of rescue.

Rioting broke out among the rescued miners and the relatives of the men who were killed and soldiers were called to prevent an attack on the mine owners when they were taken into custody.

A Monument to The Soldiers of 1812

BRONZE AND STONE MEMORIAL OF THE CANADIAN VICTORIES IN QUEEN'S PARK.

For Catenary of Peace—Large Deputation, Representing Many Places Sees Sir James Whitney.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—A deputation of over 100 prominent men and women from all parts of the Province, and a dozen dusky representatives of the Six Nations Indians, waited upon Premier Whitney at 2.30 this afternoon to urge the erection of a monument near the Parliament Buildings, in commemoration of the century-old Canadian victories in the war of 1812-15. The arrangements for the interview were made by Colonel William Hamilton Merritt, who was also one of the chief spokesmen. The deputation was representative of military regiments, societies of various kinds, the Orange Order, the Sons of England, Historical Clubs, and Daughters of the Empire, as well as the twelve chiefs from the Six Nations Indian tribes.

"More than 200 petitions have been sent in to the Government from organizations of the military, historical, national, patriotic, or similar character from all parts of Ontario," said one of the speakers. "And as a result of this we have good reason to believe that the Government looks with favor upon the project of a suitable memorial to the heroes that fell in 1812-15, and a lasting record of the victories which they won."

Sir James thanked the delegates for their patriotic motives that had prompted their action, and promised that the important matter would be most carefully considered by the Government.

TOOK THE ADVICE OF HER FRIENDS

AND DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS MADE MRS. PAINCHAUD WELL.

She Inherited Ill-Health From Her Parents, and for Seven Years Was a Sufferer From Kidney and Heart Trouble.

Whitworth, Pemiscouta Co., Que., Jan. 20.—(Special)—That she took the advice of her friends and used Dodd's Kidney Pills is the reason Mrs. Julien Painchaud of this place gives for the perfect health that shows in her every movement.

"I inherited ill-health from my parents," Mrs. Painchaude says in an interview. "For seven years my heart and Kidneys bothered me. I was always tired and nervous. I could not sleep. My eyes had dark circles round them, and were puffed and swollen.

"I could hardly do my housework when I was advised to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. One box relieved me of pain, and six boxes made me perfectly well."

Every woman who is feeling fagged tired and wornout, should use Dodd's Kidney Pills. They cure the Kidneys, and every woman's health depends on her Kidneys. Healthy Kidneys mean pure blood, and pure blood carries new life to run down organs which supply the body with energy.

If you're a suffering woman ask your friends. They'll tell you out of their own experience to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Father McColl's Letter to Canon Davidson

Below will be found the reply to Rev. Canon Davidson's invitation to the tea given by Canon Davidson, to which the members of the local Ministerial Association were invited. With the concurrence of both Father McColl and Canon Davidson, We copy the letter from a local contemporary. Canon Davidson is reported to have said that "the letter was received and interpreted in the most friendly way as was natural. It was not received until the day following the Ministerial tea, and was not shown, being treated as a private communication. It is to be hoped that the supposed extract was not intended as a quotation. It would however seem to have been built up from the kid-glove phrase, which was quoted merely as a spicy expression in a private conversation with a friend."

Peterborough, Jan. 12, 1911.

The Very Rev. Canon Davidson,
The Rectory,
Peterborough,—

My Dear Canon,—

I received your kind invitation to take tea with you this evening. I must say that I appreciate your good will very much indeed, and deeply regret that circumstances will not permit me to take advantage of the pleasure of your hospitality. I have always had a very high opinion of you personally, and I am convinced you do your work ably and conscientiously, and in a manner that can give no offence to any person, however sensitive, who may differ from you in religious belief. I am grateful, therefore, to have this opportunity of expressing to you my sentiments of sincere appreciation. It is our desire to live in peace and harmony with our separated brethren, and I have never consciously done anything to disturb such relationship.

I have never been the aggressor, though it is true I am always ready to defend our Church and people against unjust attacks and misrepresentation. That I look upon as a duty. We love our religion, and we love our King and country, and we are loyal to both the one and the other. It is, therefore, a deadly insult to us especially in this enlightened age, to have our religious belief misrepresented, or our fidelity to the principles of British liberty impugned. Against all such, who are worth noticing, we are ever ready to use the lawful weapon of self-defence, and when we do so, kid gloves form no part of our accoutrements.

But as regards yourself, dear Canon, we have not the slightest reason to complain. On the contrary, we have every reason to be grateful for the kind consideration we have always received from one we know to be not only a cultured gentleman, but a man with a kind and generous heart as well.

Thanking you for your remembrance of me when inviting your guests, believe me

Very sincerely yours,
W. J. McCOLL.

Men March Through Barcelona Waving Red Banners and Throwing Stones.

Madrid, Jan. 20.—Martial law probably will be declared in Barcelong within twenty-four hours as a result of rioting in progress to-day following the declaration of a general strike. The municipal guard and troops in the Barcelona barracks were unable to withstand the frenzied men and women to-day who marched through the streets waving red banners, and throwing stones, crying "Give us bread," and "Down with the King." A number of arrests were made and half a dozen of the rioters were badly slashed by the municipal guard who charged the rioters with drawn swords.

HOME FAT REDUCER.

Works Rapidly and Safely—Requires No Exercising and Allows You to Eat What You Like—Cut This Out.

For the benefit of those who wish to reduce their flesh quickly and safely we will give the receipt and directions in full for a simple household remedy that can be obtained at trifling cost from any good drug store; ½ ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4½ ounces Peppermint Water. All three are cheap and wholesome, but you should take care to get an unbroken package so that you get Marmola and not a substitute. When you get home mix the three together in a large bottle and take one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Follow these directions and you will have the best fat reducer that money can buy. It will take off the flesh at the rate of at least two pounds a week without disarranging the stomach or causing wrinkles, while, best of all, no exercising or dieting is required to help it out. You can get results and at the same time take things easy and eat what you like—as much as you like—and whenever you like.

THE MORNING TIMES

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1911.

AN EXPERT ON COCKTAILS.

Mr. W. R. Holt, of the London Daily Mail, has been giving the United States a lesson in hustle. He crossed over in the Mauretania. He had a special train waiting at New York to rush him to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. He interviewed the President and many other prominent people. Returning by special train he "saw" New York by taxi, and even got inside a theatre for the fragment of a performance. He caught the vessel on the return trip of its remarkable Christmas voyage, wore out a Marconi operator on the homeward journey and found a special train waiting at Fishguard to take him to London. What impresses one most about Mr. Holt's rush tour, however, is an impressive deliverance in The Daily Mail on cocktails. Speaking clearly with the authority of an expert, he says: "There are 999 cocktails in the American Pharmacopoeia, of which Martini is the King, Manhattan the Vice-Regent, and 'Bronx' the Heir-Apparent. They are illustrious, but they possess nothing like the reputation of the 'Nothing Doing' cocktail—a subtle tender mixture with blackberry brandy. 'After two of these,' said my instructor, 'you go into a quiet corner and die. No witnesses allowed.'" One would like to know if Mr. Holt tested the whole 999 varieties on the double journey between New York and Washington.

SHORT FRUIT CROP

Cold, Wet Weather Prejudicial to Cereals and Hops

According to the report of the British Board of Agriculture on the state of crops and the agricultural conditions, the wet and cold weather which prevailed generally during the summer in the southern part of the kingdom has been unfavorable to the cereals; but the changes on the month in the prospects of these crops are, for the country as a whole, slight, except in the case of oats.

Wheat and barley are still expected to prove a little over average in quantity. Speaking generally, the prospects of both have deteriorated in the south and east, and improved in the north and in Wales. Oats have suffered generally, and are now considered as hardly up to the average.

Peas are scarcely as promising as a month ago, and will probably not exceed an average crop. Beans are expected to yield a little over the average. Mangolds are also reported unchanged, while turnips and swedes are, very generally, healthy and vigorous, though mostly backward.

Potatoes have improved considerably during the month, and now appear to be relatively the most promising of all the crops; little disease is reported. Hay is generally abundant except in Scotland. Hops have not maintained their promise of a month ago, the deprecation being mostly marked in Kent. The present promise is for a crop slightly over average.

Crops of orchard fruit are reported short everywhere.

THE RED YEAR

They ste... loading the horses, until the first dark hour made progress impossible. Then, when the evening mists melted and the stars gave a faint light, they resumed the march, for every mile gained now was worth five at dawn if perchance their hunters thought of making a circular sweep of the country in the neighborhood of Rai Bareilly.

It was a glorious night. The rain of the preceding day had freshened the air, and towards midnight the moon rode into the blue arch overhead, so that they were able to mount again and ride at a faster pace. Twice they were alarmed by the barking of dogs in the precincts of small villages, but these places a wide berth, and there was no knowing what hostile might bring a ryot who had seen them into communication with the mutineers' followers.

Each hamlet marked the centre of a cultivated area. They could distinguish the jungle from the arable land almost by the animals they disturbed. A gray wolf, skulking through the sparsely wooded waste, would be succeeded by a herd of timid deer. Then a sounder of pigs, headed by a ten-inch tusker, would scamper out of the border crop, while a pack of jackals, rending the calm night with their maniac yelping, would start every dog within a mile into a frenzy of hoarse barking. Sometimes a fox slunk across their path. Out of many a tuft they drove a startled hare. In the dense undergrowth hummed and rustled a hidden life of greater mystery.

Where water lodged after the rain there were countless millions of frogs, croaking in harsh chorus, and being ceaselessly hunted by the snakes which the monsoon had driven from their nooks and crannies in the rocks. On such a night all India seems to be dead as a land but tremendously alive as a storehouse of insects, animals, and reptiles. Even the air has its strange denizens in the guise of huge beetles and vampire-winged flying foxes. And that is why men call it the unchanging East. Civilization has made but few marks on its far-flung plains. Its peoples are either nomads or dwell in huts of mud and straw and scratch the earth to grow their crops as their forbears have done since the dawn of history.

When the amber and rose tints of dawn gave distance to the horizon, the fugitives estimated that they had traversed some fifteen miles. Malcolm was ready to drop with fatigue. He was wounded; he had not slept during two nights; he had fought in a lost battle and ridden sixty-five miles without counting his exertions before going to the field of Chinhut. Nejdi and the horse which brought Chumru from Lucknow were nearly exhausted. Even the hardy Mohammedan was haggard and spent, and his oblique eyes glowed like the red embers of a dying fire.

"Sahib," he said, when they came upon a villager and his wife scraping opium from unripe poppy-heads in a field, "unless we rest and eat we shall find no boat on Ganga-to-day."

This was so undeniable that Malcolm did not hesitate to ask the ryot for milk and eggs. The man was civil. Indeed, he thought the Englishman was some important official, and took Chumru for his native deputy. He threw down the scoop, handed to his wife an earthen vessel half full of the milky sap gathered from the plants, and led the "husoors" at once to his shieling. Here he produced some ghee and chupatties, and half a dozen raw eggs. The feast might not tempt an epicure, but its components were excellent, and Frank was well aware that the ghee was exceedingly nutritious, though nauseating to European taste, being practically rancid butter made from buffalo milk.

There was plenty of fodder for the horses, too, and they showed their good condition by eating freely. The ryot eyed Chumru doubtingly when Malcolm gave him five rupees. Under ordinary conditions, the sahib's native assistant would demand the return of the money at the first convenient moment, and, indeed, Chumru himself was in the habit of exacting a stiff commission on his master's disbursements. Frank smiled at the man's embarrassed air.

"The money is thine, friend," said he, quietly, "and there is more to be earned if thou art so minded."

"I am but a poor man—" began the ryot.

"Just so. Not every day canst thou obtain good payment for a few hours' work. Now, listen. How far is the Ganges from here?"

"Less than three hours, sahib."

"What for, horses?"

"Not so, sahib. A horse can cover the distance in an hour—if he be not weary."

The peasant could use his eyes, it seemed, but Malcolm passed the phrase without comment.

"We have lost our way," he said. "We want to reach the river and take boat speedily to Allahabad. If one like thyself were willing to ride with us to the nearest village on the bank where boats can be obtained, we would give him ten rupees, and, moreover, let him keep the horse that carried him."

The ryot was delighted with his good fortune.

"Blessed be Kali!" he cried. "I saw five female ghosts with goats' heads in a tree last night, and my wife said it betokened a journey and wealth. Not only can I bring you by the shortest road, husoor, but my brother has a budgerow moored at the ghat, meaning to carry my castor-oil seeds to Mirzapur. I am not ready for him yet for three weeks or more, and he will ask no better occupation than to drop down stream with you and your camp."

"I have no camp," said Malcolm "but I pay the same rates for the boat."

"The sahib means that his camp marches by road," put in Chumru, severely. "Didst not hear him say that we have mislaid the track?"

The ryot apologised for his stupidity, and Frank recognised that his retainer disapproved very strongly of such strict adherence to the truth. On the plea that they must hasten if the midday heat were to be avoided, they cut short the halt to less than an hour. When they came to tighten the girths again they found that Chumru's horse had fallen lame. As Nejdi, too, was showing signs of stiffness, Malcolm mounted one of the spare animals and led the Arab. Chumru, and the ex-

Peruna Secrets You Should Know

Golden Seal, the root of the above plant, is a very useful medicine. Many people gather it in our rich woodlands during the summer. Few people know how valuable it is in dyspepsia, catarrh, and as a general tonic.

Many thousand pounds of this root are used each year in the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna. This fact explains why everybody uses Peruna for catarrh.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view, have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

Is a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another columns of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. Alf. Hodgson, purchasing agent of the Wheeling Mould and Foundry Co., Wheeling, W. Va., is spending a few weeks vacation with his mother, 208 Rubidge street.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Meirs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayndete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, there then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derives from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, coalesce quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

DASH FOR LIBERTY

E. B. James Recalls an Experience in South Africa

During the late South African War after the engagement of Nicholson's Nek, on October 30th, 1899, says E. B James, England, I was taken prisoner by the Boers, along with 995 others after seven hours' fighting. We were being sent under escort to a place called Waschbach, where we were to entrain for Pretoria.

I had been wounded in the foot, and, after proceeding about twelve miles, my wound became very painful, and I asked the Boer commander to allow me to ride one of the reserve ponies, of which there were several. I was allowed this privilege; and when we reached Elandslaagte I asked the commander if I might bathe my wounded foot in a stream, permission being grudgingly granted me.

I was, roughly, some twenty-five miles from Ladysmith, and every mile was swarming with Boers, but I decided to make a bolt for it. As soon as my guards saw I had finished, they gave the order to mount. Then came my chance. The Boers did exactly as I expected. Instead of waiting to see me mount, they mounted with me. Quick as thought, I pricked up my pony with the penknife I had used for cutting the bandage, and, turning his head towards Ladysmith, galloped away into the gathering dusk, accompanied by the ping-ping of the bullets which followed me.

I was not hit; and the Boers—who, in chasing me, were riding farther from their commando—soon gave it up. On the following morning I staggered into Ladysmith, exhausted, but free.

A WORD FROM MR. KELSO

He Urges Guardians to Look Well After the Children

Have you taken a child from one of the Children's Shelters into your home? If so, why have you done so? Has it been with the idea that you will get just as much as possible out of that child, and give just as little as possible? Or have you realized your responsibility and your opportunity for doing a little good and adding a little brightness to a world often too dreary? In short, have you been selfish, sordid and mean in the step that you have taken? Or, have you been benevolent, high-minded, human? Too often, it is to be feared, people look on these forlorn little ones as mere chattels, and forget to ask themselves the question, "If this child were mine, how would I wish him to be treated?"

Most commonly, perhaps, the lack of a sense of responsibility shows itself in failure to send the child to school. This fact is by no means unknown to Mr. Kelso, Superintendent of the Children's Aid Society, and he has asked us to lay the matter before you, beseeching you—at least, who read our paper—to see that you are not careless in this respect.

It is with pleasure that we accede to his request, realizing, as must everyone who gives unprejudiced thought to the matter, the truth of his words: "If a child is deprived of educational advantages between the ages of eight and fourteen, the loss can never be made good." We leave, then, the suggestion with you. It is important, not only to the young people themselves, but to the country at large, that they should have the necessary training for their life's work. You cannot evade the responsibility with impunity. Think about it.

DID FOR FATHER!

An old man and his daughter, a girl of eighteen, had a little booth on a country road, where you threw a ring at a clay pipe, and got a cigar for every "bust."

Chancing to pass that way, an expert cricketer thought he'd try his luck. Soon he had won thirty cigars.

"Seems rather mean," he pondered, as he was about to depart.

And then, in a burst of generosity, he handed them, with a courtly bow, to the young girl.

"Thanks!" she said smiling prettily. "They'll do for father."

Two days later the cricketer happened to pass the same spot. But now the girl was running the booth alone.

She saw the question in his eyes, and answered it.

"Yes," she said; "they've done for father!"

WANTED, AN OFFICE-BOY

"I can't keep the visitors from coming up," said an office-boy dejectedly to the editor of a popular newspaper. "When I say you're out they don't believe me. They say they must see you."

"Well," said the editor, "just tell them that is what they all say. I must have quiet."

Shortly afterwards there called a lady who wanted to see the editor. The boy assured her that it was impossible.

"But I must see him! I'm his wife!"

"That's what they all say!" replied the lad.

There is a vacancy for another office-boy.

UNDYING CHARM

Norah had lived as parlor maid in an artistic family for six months. It seemed to Miss Aurelia only natural that Norah should have developed some love of art in that time. One day she discovered the little maid, dust-cloth in hand, gazing at Venus of Milo.

"Do you like her best of all, Norah?" asked Miss Aurelia.

"Sure, and I do, miss," said Norah warmly. "She may not look quite so nate wid her arums gone, but she's so aisy to dust, I fair love her!"

A WEALTHY PAUPER

It has been discovered by the Lewisham Board of Guardians that an inmate of the workhouse owns land in South Africa to the value of between $10,000 and $15,000. They have placed the matter in the hands of their solicitor, to see if he can recover the amount they have expended on the supposed pauper in the last five years.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings reads like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing"—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

Treasury stock in the Mexico Mining, Refining and Exploration company can be bought today for less than ever it can be again. The mine which we have been developing for almost two years is now on the eve of bearing income. Your Luck will be Good or Bad, just as you decide—whether to come in or stay out. Decide NOW! A line from you will give you all necessary information. Act Now.

BEST WAY TO MAKE MUSHROOM BEDS

First Necessity is Fresh Stable Manure, Whether in Cellar, Shed or the Open—Keep it Damp

As to the making of a mushroom bed, it does not matter whether the bed be made up in a cellar or shed, or in the open, the first necessity is found in a good quality of fresh stable manure, from which, as it accumulates, all long straw is shaken out and put aside to dry. If all the dung needed, and it should be not less than a big cart load, can be got in at once quite fresh and not heated, so much the better. If it has to be got in driblets, then it must be put out thinly on the floor of a shed where it will not heat or become wet until enough is collected. Then it must be thrown up into a heap, be fairly well damped, and allowed to lie until it begins to get warm. Then turn it again inside out and leave it, turning it again a third time if at either turning it seems dry, well damp it again. Then, after a few days the bed can be made up very solid wherever it is to be. If under cover then flatwise and a solid foot thick. If outdoors, then as a ridge three feet broad at the base and two and a half feet high, trodden firm and made neat. Outdoors the bed should be in a sheltered position and on a dry bottom. In both cases, give the bed all over a gentle damping with water, then cover it up thickly with with straw litter or mats to help the heat to rise, as so soon as that is at its height the bed may be spawned.

EGGS IN WINTER

Six Essentials That the Supply May be Maintained

1. Early hatched pullets or yearling hens. Early pullets are the most prolific layers. See that the pullets selected for the laying pens come from hens that have a creditable record in winter performance. Like begets like, and pullets from heavy winter layers will lay better in winter than stock indiscriminately selected.

2. Dry, light, well-ventilated houses. A house with lots of windows and well ventilated is always dry. As good a way to ventilate a poultry house is to use cotton or muslin in one or two of the windows instead of glass. If a straw loft can be put in so much the better. Let in the sunlight and fresh air.

3. An egg-producing ration. Give the hens whole grain, mashes, green feed and meat. Whole grain, wheat, oats or barley is the backbone of the ration, mashes of ground oats with the hulls sifted out, shorts and bran give variety, and are easily digested; green food keeps the blood cool and gives bulk to the ration; meat supplies protein from which the albuminous portion of the egg is made. Grit for the gizzard and oyster shell or lime in some form for egg shells. Supply what else is required to form the egg.

4. Water. Hens will get along without water, getting what moisture they need from eating snow, but they do better where a supply of clean water is available most of the time; if possible all the time.

5. Exercise. Make the hens work for their living. Fat, lazy birds are never record winter layers. Exercise keeps hens warm, in good condition and contented. It is most easily provided for by feeding whole grain in a litter. Short straw, or chaff, makes the best litter. Have eight or ten inches of it on the floor, and make the birds dig their living out of it. Change the litter frequently.

6. Cleanliness. Have a dropping board beneath the roosts and scrape it clean every day. Have road dust or dry ashes or sand in convenient boxes for the birds to take dust baths in. If dust baths are provided, there is little danger of a flock becoming infested with lice. Occasionally smear the crevices about the roosts with kerosene and before winter sets in well clean out, whitewash and fumigate the house.

FISH-EATING COMPULSORY

When It Had to be Observed Two Days Every Week

Fish-eating, which has found such a strong advocate in Sir James Crichton-Browne, was at one time compulsory by law on at least two days in every week. In 1593 Queen Elizabeth's Privy Council issued a mandate ordaining that it should "not be lawful for any person within that realm to eat any flesh upon any days observed as fish days, upon pain of forfeit of $15 (equal to about $150 at the present day) for every time he offended," and, further, that "no inn-holder, alehouse-keeper, or common table-keeper shall utter or put on sale upon a fish-day any kind of flesh victuals upon pain of forfeiture of $25." This Act was prompted by the fact that the fishing industry, which provided the nucleus of her Majesty's Navy, both in the matter of men and of vessels was suffering so severely by the growing indulgence of the people in beef and mutton that many of the fisherfolk were abandoning the trade. This the Privy Council rightly judged to be a danger to the realm.

WANTED AN EARTHQUAKE

The late Dr. Maclagan greatly appreciated the point of a reply which the witty vicar of a sleepy Yorkshire village sent to him when asked to lend his church for the purpose of giving the people of the district a "quiet day" for meditation.

"My dear Lord Archbishop," wrote the vicar, "your very kind letter to hand. But what the people in this village want most in their spiritual life is not a 'quiet day,' but an earthquake."

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER. YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

Moral Reform on a U. S. Railroad

New York, Jan. 21.—A despatch to the Tribune from Boston says: The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to-day issued orders to its conductors to stop all card playing on the trains of the system. Another order is that children shall not ride in the smoking cars, either alone or accompanied by an older person. Conductors have been empowered to have arrested the parent or guardian of the child if accompanied by such, on failure to leave the car when so ordered. Hereafter no games of cards, games of chance, or use of chips will be permitted. Complaints were made about the presence of card sharps on the trains and the fleecing of passengers.

Prof. Jackson's Book

Mr. John Carlisle Criticises His Latest Book.

To the Editor of The Times,—

Sir,—Please allow me to give your readers a few extracts from Prof. Jackson's latest book, which book is used as a text-book in Victoria University. On page 93, he says:

"The Biblical writers are often careless about details; they have none of that passion for accuracy, that sense of the value of fact, as fact, which are so conspicuous in our great modern historians." Little wonder that a man who could speak so irreverently of the holy men of God, who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, does not at all hesitate to brand the sacred scriptures as largely being composed of myth legends, religious romance, dramatic poems, discrepencies and contradictions, &c. But as Prof. J. confesses that these conclusions are arrived at by methods and details, that are enshrowded in everlasting uncertainty, they are absolutely worthless and unreliable and must in the very nature of the case be ruled out of court. He has never given one reason why he brands the Books of Daniel, Esther and Jonah as books of romance or imaginary tales. Our Lord Jesus Christ quoted in one of his sermons from the Book of Daniel and said "But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken by Daniel THE PROPHET standing in the holy place, etc." Mat. 24: 15. Any teaching that so absolutely discredits and degrades the authority of Jesus Christ and his Apostles strikes at the very foundation of the Christian Church, for God hath built that Church "on the foundation of the Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." This teaching also strikes at the very foundation of the state for back of all civil power is the great restraining power of the Word of God. Let the masses once come to believe this monstrous lying teaching, that the Bible is largely a book of myths, romance, legends, contradictions, discrepencies, &c. as the churches are teaching them then, I say, when the masses believe these lies, our lives and liberties will be sworn away from us as lightly as if the witnesses were kissing a volume of Aesop's fables. Beware how you stand, reader, on this question.

JOHN CARLISLE.

P.S.—Many of the Christian people of this city are pained to see the Ministerial Association of our city fraternizing with men of Prof. Geo. Jackson's stamp.—J.C.

TO MAKE TROUBLE AT CORONATION

Suffragettes Will Carry Out Bold Plan if Franchise is Not Granted Them.

London, Jan. 21.—Considerable uneasiness existed in officials circles here to-day over a threat made by Mrs. Pankhurst, leader of the English suffragettes, in a speech made in Paris, when she threatened trouble during the coronation ceremonies here if Parliament failed to come to time on the Woman's Suffrage Bill.

Many conjectures were made as to what Mrs. Pankhurst meant by her threat. It is generally believed that the Suffragettes intend having a monster parade of women on the day of the coronation pageant if the Women's Suffrage Bill is not passed.

SHE DROVE PIN IN CHILD'S BRAIN

One of Kentucky's Beautiful Ladies Charged With Revolting Crime.

Carlisle, Ky., Jan. 21.—The greatest sensation that this section of Kentucky's blue grass region ever knew came to-day, when Laura Grey a beautiful 23-year-old girl, was arrested, charged with having brutally murdered her new-born child. Mrs. Terry Grey, the girl's mother, and Richard Smot, one of the wealthiest farmers in this section of the State were arrested at the same time.

The method by which the child was done to death was atrociously brutal. A large pin had been driven into its brain through one of its eyes and its skull had been battered into pulp with a club. The girl, it is charged, committed the murder.

PLEASED WITH THE TREATY CANADIANS RETURN HOME

ANNOUNCEMENT TO BE MADE SIMULTANEOUSLY ON THURSDAY NEXT AT WASHINGTON AND OTTAWA.

Treaty Agreed Upon is Likely to Take the Form of Concurrent Legislation—U.S. Senate and House Leader Sore.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 21.—"The negotiations have reached an understanding which, when certain formalities are completed, will be made public at Washington and Ottawa. It is thought this may be done next Thursday."

With this illuminating statement the reciprocity negotiations came to an end early this afternoon. The Canadian negotiators are leaving at once for the north. Mr. Patterson for New York and Mr. Fielding to spend Sunday in Baltimore. The same absolute silence was maintained by the two parties at the end of the one-hour session which marked the negotiations closed. When seen by a newspaper representative the Canadian Ministers, and Secretary Knox, not a word of information could be obtained from them. Mr. Fielding would not even admit that there had been any signing of an agreement, although that of course goes without saying. Opinion is about equally divided as to whether the understanding referred to in the official statement is in the form of a treaty or an agreement for concurrent legislation.

SENATE AND HOUSE LEADERS SORE.

So far neither the President nor Secretary Knox has made a single move to acquaint either the Senate or the House leaders with the terms of the agreement, and it is rumored that these are inclined to be annoyed at this unusual procedure.

It is just possible that this circumstance, small as it is, will have its effect on the ultimate fate of the treaty or agreement. The Canadian negotiators were much pleased with their treatment here, so far as personal relations were concerned. Official reticence promptly came to their rescue when they were asked if this pleasure extended to the agreement. The Canadians did not have the air of defeated or dejected men, however. If external appearances count for anything they were well satisfied.

Schenectady, N.Y. Jan. 21.—A John Krygowski, an employee at the American Locomotive Works, was about to replace a chain on a sprocket wheel of a machine used to straighten scrapiron, his sleeve got caught in the cogs and he was whirled about until his legs had been torn from his body, his head crushed and his clothes completely ripped off. Woman Killed Father in Defence of Husband

Cravenette, Ark., Can. 21.—Mrs. Nellie Allen, 21 years old, shot and killed her father, John B. Boyer, a wealthy planter, at their home near Maysville to-day, after the two had exchanged half a dozen shots. Boyer and the woman's husband, John Allen, were in a quarrel. Boyer rushed on Allen with a drawn knife, when Mrs. Allen opened fire. Boyer returned the fire, but his bullets went wild, while one of them from the woman's revolver pierced his brain.

Planned Big Haul From Molson's Bank

GANG HAD INGENIOUS PLAN FOR PASSING FORGED CHEQUES ON MONTREAL BANK.

One of the Most Daring Attempts to Swindle the Bank of Thousands of Dollars Nipped in the Bud.

Montreal, Jan. 21.—Through the arrest by the detectives of a young man by the name of Belisle, his arrangement in private before Judge Lanctot, and his making a clean breast of the whole thing, it has now come to light that one of the most daring attempts to swindle the Molsons Bank of thousands of dollars through forged cheques was nipped in the bud about a month ago, thanks to the manager and the accountant and the paying teller of a branch of office of the bank, where the swindle was to be perpetrated.

The Molsons Bank branch where the affair happened, is the St. Henri branch of that institution, corner of Notre Dame street West and St. Henri street.

JUMPED THROUGH WINDOW.

Two young men besides the one under arrest, and who is kept very closely guarded by the detectives, are being looked for. The arrest of one of them is a matter of a few hours. As to the other, it is thought that he has left the city, after eluding arrest by jumping from a second-storey window of a building at Cot St. Paul, while the detectives were waiting for him on the first floor.

A BONELESS CHILD

The St. Asaph Board of Guardians has just discussed the case of a girl who is reported to have no bones. She is 15 years of age, but weighs only 30 lbs. and is only 36 inches in height. In place of bones she has "soft formations." She has never been able to walk, but her framework is such that she has been able to move about on crutches. She is the daughter of a labourer in poor circumstances.

WOLVES IN FRANCE

There are still wolves in France. A bounty of $10 per head is paid by the state for an adult wolf, and $2.50 for cubs weighing less than 19 lbs. When it can be proved that the wolf has attacked human beings the amount is raised to a special bounty of $20. Last year the number of wolves killed was forty-eight.

THRILLING FEATS OF RUNAWAY STEED.

Follows Track and Ends by Dropping in a Creek Near Lakefield.

On Friday evening three young men hired a horse from Mr. M. Storey, saying they were going to Lakefield. When they were turning the corner of London the cutter slewed, throwing the occupants over. The horse ran to the power house and across the railway bridge and following the railway tracks until it reached Nassau, and when it reached the bridge, about a mile from Lakefield it ran over the end and pulled the cutter down on top of it.

The young fellows by following its track succeeded in finding it and brought it home, though it was pretty badly injured.

INSIDE HISTORY.

Some Self-Explanatory Letters.

Battle Creek, Mich., Jan'y 7, '11.
Dr. E. H. Pratt,
Suite 1202, 100 State St.,
Chicago, Illinois.

My Dear Doctor:

"Owing to some disagreement with ——magazine several years ago they have become quite vituperative, and of late have publicly charged me with falsehoods in my statements that we have genuine testimonial letters.

"It has been our rule to refain from publishing the names either of laymen or physicians who have written to us in a complimentary way, and we have declined to accede to the demand of attorneys that we turn these letters over to them.

"I am asking a few men whom I deem to be friends to permit me to reproduce some of their letters over their signatures in order to refute the falsehoods.

"We have hundreds of letters from physicians, but I esteem the one that you wrote to me in 1906 among the very best particularly in view of the fact that it recognizes the work I have been trying to do partly through the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

"I do not sell or attempt to sell the higher thought which is more important than the kind of food, but I have taken considerable pains to extend to humanity such facts as may have come to me on this subject.

"In order that your mind may be refreshed I am herewith enclosing a copy of your good letter, also a copy of the little book, and if you will give me the privilege of printing this over your signature I will accompany the printing with an explanation as to why you permitted its use in publication in order to refute falsehoods, and under that method of treatment I feel, so far as I know, there would be no breach of the code of ethics.

"I trust this winter weather is finding you well, contented and enjoying the fruits that are yours by right.

With all best wishes, I am."

Yours very truly,
C. W. Post.

Dr. Pratt, who is one of the most prominent and skillful surgeons in America, very kindly granted our request in the cause of truth and justice.

Chicago, Aug. 31, 1906

Mr. C. W. Post,
Battle Creek, Mich.

My dear Sir:—

"I write to express my personal appreciation of one of your business methods that of accompanying each package of your Grape-Nuts production with the little booklet "The Road to Wellville." A more appropriate, clear-headed and effective presentation of health-giving auto-suggestions could scarcely be penned.

"Grape-Nuts is a good food in itself, but the food contained in this little article is still better stuff. I commend the practice because I know that the greed and strenuousness, the consequent graft and other types of thievery and malicious mischief generally can never be cured by legislative action.

"The only hope for the betterment of the race rests in individual soul culture.

"In taking a step in this direction, your process has been so original and unique that it must set a pace for other concerns until finally the whole country gets flavored with genuine, practical Christianity.

"I shall do all that lies in my power to aid in the appreciation of Grape-Nuts, not so much for the sake of the food itself as for the accompanying suggestions.

"Visiting Battle Creek the other day with a friend, Dr. Kelly, of Evanston, Illinois, while I was consulting with Mr. Gregory, my friend visited your factories and came away greatly amazed, not only at the luxurious furnishings of the offices generally and the general equipment of the place, but with the sweet spirit of courtesy and kindness that seemed to fill the air with spiritual ozone that was good to breathe.

"The principles expressed in the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," I well know are practical and they work in business of all kinds, including sanitariums, as will be fairly tested before time is done.

"I know you will not regard this letter of appreciation as an intruding one. It is simply the salutations of good-fellowship to you from a man who, although he has never seen you, feels drawn to you by the kinship of thought.

"The only thing that makes a man live forever in the hearts of his countrymen and his race is the good that he does. Your position in this respect is an enviable one and I wish to extend my congratulations."

Yours respectfully,
E. H. PRATT.

Father and Husband Was Still Ignorant of His Terrible Loss

MR. BROOKS, WHOSE WIFE AND CHILDREN WERE BURNED TO DEATH LOCATED.

On His Way to Indianapolis to Meet His Brother Who Will Tell Him of the Awful Tragedy.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—In the silence of the early morning, while all the city slumbered, there was being enacted in the beautiful and exclusive Indian road district, one of the saddest fire tragedies in the city's history.

The lives of a loving young mother her three beautiful children, and one of the servants of the household were lost before the merciless sweep of terrible flames that about 1.15 a.m. swept up the broad stair case of the home at 435 Indian road, and cut off all avenue of escape.

In attempting to rescue one of the children the mother threw aside her own chance for life and her heroism is one of the bright spots in a dark and pathetic story.

Only one of the six occupants of that happy prosperous home escaped to tell the story, and she is in the Western hospital to-day raving in nervous incoherency from the shock of the terrible affair. This fortunate servant leaped for her life from a second storey window and escaped.

The other servant was burned to death with the family.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—By means of a telegram which the unfortunate father sent this morning to his family in Toronto from Chicago, intimate friends of the family have succeeded in locating him, and by this time will doubtless have had the sad news of the entire loss of his whole family broken to him.

Mr. Brooks' wire from Chicago was sent to let his wife know that he would not be home to-morrow, as he had expected. It is stated that he had changed his plans, and would go on to Indianapolis, to meet his brother, who lives there. His brother has been communicated with, and will tell the tragic story on the arrival of the bereaved father from Chicago. It is expected that the two brothers will arrive in this city to-morrow morning.

Locks Hubby in Room Flees with Real Lover

Berlin, Jan. 21.—A well-to-do Berlin merchant, whose name is suppressed, is mourning the loss of his wife who eloped under curious circumstances a few days ago.

The merchant, who is aged fifty-six had been living in ideal happiness with his twenty-five year old wife since their marriage in 1908. He did not suspect her affection for the grave, attentive bookkeeper who recently entered his employ, and the young man was invited to join the family for some festivities one evening.

Just after the merchant had handed his faithful clerk a purse full of gold, the lady asked him to hide himself in his bedroom for a moment as she "wanted to carry out a little surprise for him." He laughingly complied, and he offered no objection when his wife cried merrily to him, "For safety's sake I am going to lock you in."

He waited patiently to be called, but as the minutes grew into half an hour he became impatient and called to the servants to let him out. With the aid of a locksmith his release was effected, and then to his horror the merchant discovered that his wife and the bookkeeper were missing, together with $800 from the safe, which had been thoroughly rifled. On the table the merchant found a letter from his wife saying that her love for husband more than twice her own age had grown cold and that she had decided to flee with the real object of her affections.

SESSION OPENS JANUARY 24TH

Part of the Re-built Western Wing Will be Ready for Occupation Before that Date

The annual revival of interest in the public affairs of Ontario has followed the announcement that the members of the Legislature will meet in annual session on Tuesday, January 24th. Some weeks ago there were rumors that delay in the completion of the work of rebuilding the western wing would be an effective barrier to a January session. The middle portion of the renewed section will be ready, however, for occupation this month. This consists of about forty rooms, some of which will be available for committees of the Legislature. The Law Clerk of the House and his staff, who have been occupying the Government lobby and a portion of the floor of the Chamber, will be in their new quarters by the time the Legislature convenes. The Clerk Assistant of the House, who has desk room in the Chamber, the Clerk of the House, whose quarters since the fire have been in the room set apart for the Leader of the Opposition, and the Insurance Registrar and his staff, who occupy the Opposition lobby of the House, will also be away to more commodious and comfortable habitation in the rebuilt wing. The members will therefore find that much of the inconvenience they sustained throughout the session of 19— has been removed, leaving them more room in which to transact business of public moment. It is expected that the debate on the Speech from the Throne will begin on Wednesday, January 25th, and that it will be concluded by the end of the week.

Already a flood of applications for private legislation is pouring in upon the Clerk of the House. A large majority of these prospective measures are of routine character and have to do with local and municipal problems. Many municipalities are asking legislative approval of exemption by-laws. A few individuals are seeking to be legislated into professions. The Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, and the Church of the Disciples of St. Thomas have applied for legislation to amend their acts of incorporation to enable them to hold lands bequeathed to them in unlimited form. A relic of possible debate will be found in the application of the trustees of the public and separate schools and the town of Sturgeon Falls for legislation confirming an agreement at length arrived at for the financial conduct of their educational institutions.

Had Hand Cut by Axe.

A young man, named Charles Colon had his hand severely cut while at work for the R. Heard Lumber Co., near Best's station. He slipped and his hand fell on a tree which another man was chopping. Dr. Scott was called and the injured man was taken to the hospital.

SAFETY IN NUMBERS.

It is suggested that the Banking Act should place a limit on the amount which a bank may advance to any one person or concern. Such a provision would be in accordance with the spirit of the present day law, which provides that a bank shall not "deal in the buying or selling or bartering of goods, or engage or be engaged in any trade or business whatsoever." When a bank invests in a mine and amount equal to or greater than its capital, it becomes virtually a mining company, and so transgresses the spirit of the law. The same would be true of a railway, or even of a trading company, if the advanced equalled too large a proportion of the capital. The safety of the bank should not be staked upon the fortunes of any one enterprise.

It is true, too, that it is just in this way that bank managers or directors are likely to be tempted. A particular mine or stock is painted in rosy colors, described as a "good thing," out of which a fortune may easily be made. There is no glamor about lending money to the ordinary merchant or manufacturer. In the multitude of credits there is safety. An occasional loss will be made up by the aggregate of small profits.

Moreover, by distributing its advances over a large field, the bank best fulfills the condition, meets the want, for which it is organized. The money sunk in the Keeley mine would have relieved the anxiety and encouraged the enterprise of a host of small traders and manufacturers; and with reasonable care, the percentage of loss would have been very small. Everything should be done to encourage the kind of banking which does the greatest good to the greatest number.

ADVISING THE BOY VIOLINIST

Mischa Elman, the famous boy violinist, has been telling an amusing story of his early childhood. "When I was very small, indeed," he says, "I played at a reception at a Russian prince's, and, for an urchin of seven, I flatter myself I rattled off Beethoven's 'Kreutzer Sonata' finely. This sonata, you know, has in it several long and impressive rests. Well, in one of those rests, a motherly old lady leaned forward, patted my shoulder, and said: 'Play something you know, dear.'"

THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED)

the guidance ac
path, they set out for the Ganges.

There are few features of the landscape so complex in their windings as the foot-paths of India. Owing to the immense distances between towns the fertile and densly populated Doab offers no standard of comparison for the remainder of a vast continent—roads were scarce and far between in Mutiny days. The Grand Trunk Road and the rivers Ganges and Jumna were the main arteries of traffic. Foot men marched across country on narrow ribands of field path through plowed land, or traversed nullah and hill and jungle and intersected each other at every point where wholly inertial advance one traveled by the compass and well-known landmarks, where roads were visible.

The ryot, of course, familiar with each yard of the route, practically followed a straight line. After a steady jog of an hour and a half they saw the silver thread of the Ganges from the crest of a small ridge that ran north and south. The river was then about three miles distant, and they were hurrying down the descent when they came upon an ekka, a little native two-wheeled cart, without springs, and drawn by a diminutive pony. Alone among wheeled conveyances, the ekka can leave the main roads in fairly level country, and this one had evidently brought a zemindar from a riverside village.

The man himself, a portly, full bearded Mohammedan, was examining a growing crop, and his behavior, no less than the furtive looks cast at the newcomers by his driver, warned Malcolm that here, for a certainty, the Mutiny was a known thing. The zemindar's face assumed a bronze-green tint when he saw the European officer, and the sulky-looking native perched behind the shafts of the ekka growled something in the local patois that caused the ryot sitting behind Chumru to squirm uneasily.

The other glanced hastily around, as though he hoped to find assistance near, and Chumru muttered to his master:

"Have a care, sahib, else we may hop on to a limed twig."

The boldest course was the best one. Malcolm rode up to the zemindar, who was separated some forty paces from the ekka.

"I come from Lucknow," he said. "What news is there from Fattehpore and Allahabad?"

The man hesitated. He was so completely taken aback by the sight of an armed officer riding towards him in broad daylight—for Malcolm having lost his own sword had taken Chumru's—that he was hardly prepared to meet the emergency.

"There is little news," he said, at last, and it was not lost on his questioner that the customary phrases of respect were omitted, though he spoke civilly enough.

"Nevertheless, what is it?" demanded Frank. "Has the Mutiny spread thus far, or is it confined to Cawnpore?"

"I know not what you mean," was the self-contained answer. "In this district we are peacable people. We look after our crops, even as I am engaged at this moment, and have no concern with what goes on elsewhere."

"A most worthy and honorable sentiment, and I trust it will avail you when we have hanged all these rebels and we come to inquire into the conduct of your village. I want you to accompany me now and place my orderly and myself on board a boat for Allahabad."

"That is impossible—sahib—" and the words came reluctantly—"there are no boats on the river these days."

"Why not?"

"They are all away, carrying grain and hay."

"What then, are your crops so forward? This one will not be ready for harvesting ere another month."

"You will not find a budgerow on this side. Perchance they will ferry you across at the village in a small boat, and you will have better accommodation at Fattehpore."

"Are we opposite Fattehpore?"

"Yes—sahib."

All the while the zemindar's eyes were looking furtively from Frank to the lower ground. It was a puzzling situation. The man was not actively hostile, yet his manner betrayed an undercurrent of fear and dislike that could only be accounted for by the downfall of British power in the locality. Thinking Chumru could deal better with his fellow-countryman, Malcolm called him, breaking in on a lively conversation that was going on between his servant and the ekka wallah.

Chumru, who had told the ryot to dismount, came at once.

"Our friend here says that things are quiet on the river, but there are no boats to be had," explained Malcolm. Chumru grinned, and the zemindar regarded him with troubled eyes.

"Excellent," he said. "We shall go to his house and wait while his servants look for a boat."

This suggestion seemed to please the other man.

"I will go on in front in the ekka," he agreed, "and lead you to my dwelling speedily."

Chumru edged nearer his master while their new acquaintance walked towards the ekka.

"Jump down and tie both when I give the word, sahib," he whispered. "There has been murder done here."

Malcolm understood instantly that his native companion had found the ekka-wallah more communicative. In fact, Chumru had fooled the man by pretending a willingness to slay the Feringhi forthwith, and the sheep-like ryot was now livid with terror at the prospect of witnessing an immediate killing.

When the zemindar was close to the ekka, Chumru whipped out one of the Brahmin's cavalry pistols.

"Now, sahib!" he cried. Malcolm drew his sword and sprang down. The zemindar fell on his knees.

"Spare my life, husoor, and I will tell thee everything," he roared.

Were he not so worn with fatigue and were not the issues depending on the man's revelations so important, Malcolm would have laughed at this remarkable change of tone. The flabby, well-fed rascal squealed like a pig when the point of the sword touched his skin, and the Englishman was forced to scowl fiercely to hide a smile.

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When It Is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. Alf. Hodgson, purchasing agent of the Wheeling Mould and Foundry Co., Wheeling, W. Va., is spending a few weeks vacation with his mother, 208 Rubidge street.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields,

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Mairs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneto, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,000 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing magnety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline, due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least so far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, coalesce quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

MAN WHO FAILS SOMETIMES LAZY

Writer in Poultry Journal Tells of Reasons Why Some Men Tell To Make Birds Pay

The man who fails with poultry is sometimes lazy. He would rather lie in bed on a cold morning or swing in a hammock on a hot day than "bother" with the birds. He cannot see the need of "fussing" with the little chicks; nor of fresh water once or more daily, nor of keeping houses and yards "spick and span" clean; nor of always fighting vermin; nor, in brief, of any of the routine duties which successful men insist upon as a matter of course.

The man who fails is sometimes a fool. He heeds the glowing fairy tales told by truth-killing grammar-butchering fakers of some woman reaching down into her inside pocket and handing out a "five thousand dollar bill and five five hundred dollar bills" for half a dozen birds; or of thousands of gullible people viewing a hen said to be valued at thousands of dollars (the original hen, as the gawks should know, died years ago); or perhaps he has read of three-day-old chicks being sold for $100; or of some fat old hen laying 263 eggs in 272 days which is at the rate of 352 in a year. If he has read these lies, and is idiotic enough to believe them, he is foolish enough to believe that he, too, can swindle people in the same way. Of course he fails, because every greedy, plundering knave fails sooner or later, as our prison records show.

The man who fails sometimes lacks judgment. He may be honest; he may work hard early and late, but because of poor management he makes no more progress than a whale trying to swim in a foot of water. He puts cheap stock into elaborate houses, he puts good stock into draughty, leaky out-buildings; he overfeeds, underfeeds or fails to give the right sort of feed; he breeds fancy stock and neither exhibits nor advertises; he does not look after little things, forgetting that these very "little things" make up the sum of success; in short, he lacks what is commonly called "horse sense."

The man who fails is often a beginner who has been duped by knaves who should be wearing convict stripes instead of being touted and praised as some of them are. He reads in supposedly "reliable" poultry papers of a "system" whereby a clear profit of $2,880 can be made in one year from 24 hens—which is at the rate of $120 per year from each hen; or of a "strain" of big birds which "lay when two and a half months old"; or of a single bird producing 300 chicks in twelve months; or of anything else equally absurd and criminally false-being wholly inexperienced he cannot see the absurdity of these lies, and he "bites," as the sordid knaves expect him to do. As a result he loses his money and time; and failure, for which he is not to blame, results.—G. F. Townsend, in American Poultry Advocate.

POULTRY-KEEPING

A Practical Consideration of the Finance of It

Of course, poultry cannot be kept by everyone. Some amount of land is essential, but it is surprising what good results can be obtained by the enthusiast on a very small area.

The secret lies in having just as many birds as can be adequately accommodated.

There is a never-failing demand for fresh-laid eggs. Hence the poultry-keeper has no difficulty in finding a market for his produce; while provided the most suitable breeds of fowls are kept and a correct system of feeding is adopted, eggs can be obtained all through the winter months when the market price is high.

A hen of a good laying strain should average 150 eggs per annum. If she produces a less number than this, she is not worth keeping.

Only pure-bred specimens of a good laying strain should be kept, for, contrary to popular belief, "mongrels" and cross-breds are not the best layers.

Breeding fowls for exhibition is a very different matter, and there are hundreds of men who rely solely upon the profits of this branch of poultry-keeping. Many are making very substantial incomes, and scattered over the country are thousands of "hobbyist" fanciers who obtain for their birds prices of sufficient magnitude to make the utilitarian turn green with envy. Eggs for hatching from such valuable birds naturally command high prices per dozen eggs.

Breeding exhibition birds, when one has become known as a breeder, is much more remunerative and, withal, more interesting than utility breeding. The initial cost of the stock birds, however, far exceeds that of utility specimens.

To be successful as an exhibitor one must specialize in some one particular breed or variety; the most successful fanciers of the day are specialists.

It need not be thought that a large area of ground is necessary for exhibition poultry-keeping. Many of the leading winners of the year are bred by working men in back-yard runs. Bantams can be kept in very confined quarters.

There is never any difficulty in selling first-class birds. The professional exhibitor will be glad to buy them at a good price. It is the second and third-raters that are so difficult to dispose of at their approximate value.

ONION VS. APPLE

Apropos the fact that an apple a day will keep the doctors away, it is now pointed out that an onion a day will keep everybody away.

SELECTING FROM BEST POTATOES

Importance of Choosing From the Finest Hills for Next Year's Seed—Way to Do It

Breeding plants is becoming as great and important a science as ever the consistent breeding and improvement of live stock has been. A few years ago, the popular mind troubled itself little about such things. Not that it was by any means a new thing, for there were always men who realised this, and practised it too. Many years ago old Aberdeenshire farmers, as well as others of a progressive type, used to select their seed with care, and progress in the acquisition of new varieties were constant. But the public never really grasped its true importance. Today, work along these lines is developing on every hand and farmers are beginning to realize the possibilities there are in it. A few years ago, the practice of saving only the smaller potatoes for seed was a common one. Then the importance of using good, healthy, plump specimens only was advocated. Recent investigations indicate the wisdom of going still further in this work, and using only good potatoes from the most prolific and healthy looking hills. Here is how to do it.

When digging the potatoes, dig up a large number of hills, and leave the potatoes lie for the time right where they were dug up. Then fix a certain number of hills in your mind, which will be selected as the ones from which to choose seed for the following year. Go all over the plot, and pick out the number which look the best in all respects. Select from these the best specimens and keep them as seed for the following year. This is a simple matter. It is only following the system by which a progressive and careful breeder of high-class pure-bred stock endeavors to select his breeding animals from each successive crop of youngsters, but it is a plan which can be followed by any farmer, and it will give such results as will encourage him to extend the same system to every department on the farm.—Canadian Farm.

TIGER HUNT ON LINER

Thrilling Incidents on an Atlantic Voyage Recently

There was tremendous excitement on board the Atlantic Transport Company's liner Minnewaska during the last two days of the voyage, which came to an end when the steamer arrived in the Thames. The vessel brought from America Bostock's menagerie, and, at five one morning it was discovered that a big Bengal tiger had ripped open the iron bars of its cage and escaped. The menagerie hands were summoned, and armed with guns, revolvers, and iron bars they made a cautious search. The tiger was discovered on the back of an Indian sacred cow, lapping up the blood from a fearful gash in its neck. Blank cartridges were fired, and, after much manoeuvring, the beast was driven back into its cage. Before this could be made secure, however, it had dashed out again, scattering the attendants in all directions. The tiger was again rounded up, and eventually secured. The cow died shortly afterwards. These excitement was renewed subsequently, when it was known that the tiger was again making desperate attempts to escape, defying the menagerie staff, who were kept continually on the alert. At the same time a hyena managed to get loose and had a run, but it was recaptured without much difficulty.

SOME HINTS ON IRONING

When ironing lace, ribbons, or any long, narrow strips be careful not to stretch them crooked, but to do them slowly, straight and evenly, the point of the iron pressing out every scallop separately. Always iron lace and needlework on the wrong side.

Collars should be done first lengthways, then crossways. Take care not to stretch one half larger than the other.

All colored things must be done with the iron rather cooler than for white clothes, as too great heat will injure the color. Iron them always on the wrong side, whenever the manner in which they are made will allow it.

When about to iron a dress begin at the bodice, next iron the sleeves, and lastly the skirt, commencing at the upper part.

If you want to marry a man, make love to him. If you want a man to marry you let him to the love-making.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings reads like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

HORROR OF PRISON

A Youth Writes of the Weeks that Seem as if they Would Never End

After being arrested for stealing overcoats from boarding-houses in Shepherd's Bush and Hammersmith, Thomas William Granger, aged twenty-one, a neatly-dressed clerk, wrote a statement pleading the misery of his life. In this statement he said:

"I am sick of this hopeless existence, and the hopelessness of this life. During the last five years my life has been misery. I am ruined physically and morally, and the longer I stay in this world the more misery I shall have to endure.

"On my release from prison I came out with the intention of leading a better life, but having nowhere to go and no work led to sleeplessness and starvation, which weakened what little self-control I had left, and I fell.

"The world is a hard place to live in. What chance have we who have lost our characters when the men who have cannot get work? Prison has done me no good. It has hardened me and made me an atheist and a misanthrope.

"Just look at my record. Do you think I will ever get on? No, I do not, and so I intend to put an end to this misery. You little know the misery we undergo in prison, when the days seem weeks, and the weeks infinity. For five years I have been hardly out of prison.

"I have a good pater and mater, but I have disgraced them by my conduct, and for three years I have not seen them. They gave me a good education, and this is the result of it.

"There are two things I think, will pull me up. That is, work and marriage."

Nine previous convictions were proved, and sentence of fifteen months' imprisonment was passed.

MAY WIPE OUT LOW NECKS

Queen Mary Has Started a Crusade Against Them, and "High Necks" Will be Good Etiquette

Queen Mary, whose habits and ideas are very puritanical in every way, has decided upon a crusade against the low-necked evening dress, and in this she has the full support of King George. During the reign of King Edward, and even under Queen Victoria, the court dresses of ladies were cut as low as possible, but Queen Mary has a great dislike for this fashion, and she has made it clear to the ladies of her household that if a dress is cut away at the neck at all it should be as little as possible. At the present time the edicts of the Court make it compulsory for low-necked dress to be worn on all "full-dress" occasions, but this will be greatly modified during the next few years. She prefers to introduce the innovation gradually, but she has already made it clear that elderly ladies and others, who desire to wear high-necked dresses at next season's courts may do so without infringing any detail of court etiquette.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amount necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—The report that Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., will succeed Sir Allen Aylesworth as Minister of Justice is laughed at in official circles—last, because the latter does not intend resigning from office until the end of the present Parliament, and secondly because Mr. Nesbitt is a rock-ribbed Conservative.

The other story that Speaker Marcil is to succeed Hon. William Pugsley as Minister of Public Works is equally nonsensical, for the very good reason that Mr. Pugsley is not going to retire or go to the Department of Marine.

Organization of County Temperance Alliance

REPRESENTATIVES FOR DIFFERENT MUNICIPALITIES OF THE COUNTY WERE PRESENT.

Mr. F. W. Duggan, of Toronto, Addressed the Meeting—The Officers Elected for the Year.

In the Y.M.C.A. parlors yesterday, representatives from all the municipalities of Peterborough County, gathered to form a County Temperance Alliance.

Mr. F. W. Duggan, the Provincial Secretary of Temperance work, in addressing the meeting, said the last year was the most successful in the history of the Alliance. Between licenses to be cut off and in nearly seventy places now actively engaged in an educational campaign for submitting the by-law to their different municipalities in 1912. Among those are Belleville, Woodstock, Stratford, Chatham, Port Arthur and Fort William.

Over $52,000 was subscribed last year to carry on the work in the province. The Temperance Alliance will conduct 2,500 educational meetings this year.

The following resolution was passed by the meeting:

HOMELY GIRLS ARE BEST TO MARRY

SAYS FRENCH MAGAZINE, AFTER MAKING THOROUGH HYMENEAL INVESTIGATION.

Pretty and Empty-Headed Too Often is Character of Beauties—Ugly Duckling Wear Best.

(Special to The Times.)

Paris, Jan. 21.—That homely ducklings are the girls to marry is learnedly argued in one of the leading magazines.

A young man between the age of 25 and 28, says the editor, is nearly always inclined to marry a girl of 21 or less, that is something sweet, elegant, well dressed, engaging. But the supposed composite of everything nice doesn't know much, and her shortcomings are bound to develop in a few months after the marriage ceremony at the latest.

Even before they fully develop, the husband is often thrown out of his equilibrium by the little beauty at his side. When they do show, her defects become most glaring day by day, while her beauty fades from his mental and physical eye in the same proportion. After a while the husband of a beauty can see nothing but his wife's shortcomings.

THE UGLY DUCKLING.

"Now, look at the ugly duckling wife. True, at first her ugliness appals you. Forget it. After a few months you will begin to perceive certain fragments of harmony in that bundle of ugliness. You will think her smile not half bad; you will see something fascinating in her eyes. Maybe her hair is pretty, maybe her ear is divinely formed. You discover it, and are pleased—very pleased. You are the most pleased because you alone see these good points. There are no admirers to rave about them. The element of jealousy is eliminated."

There are hundreds of young men, married to young women, who forever seek the society of older and homelier women. Why? Because the eternal prettiness and emptyheadedness of their wives wearies them, and they are hungering for a crumb of good sense. Another thing to remember: Never marry a girl who has society on the brain, or your home will be a thing intermediate between a museum and a hotel.

Do you know that of all the minor ailments colds are by far the most dangerous? It is not the cold itself that you need to fear, but the serious diseases that it often leads to. Most of these are known as germ diseases. Pneumonia and consumption are among them. Why not take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and cure your cold while you can? For sale by all dealers.

MARY'S TO JOIN IN GIFT ON QUEEN'S CROWNING

London, Jan. 21.—A wonderful scheme has been organized to enable every woman and girl in the United Kingdom who is a namesake of Queen Mary to pay homage directly to her coronation.

Mary, Marie, Maria, May, Marian and Marion, whether they reside in England, Scotland, or Ireland, can all join in offering a gift to the Queen.

The gift is to take the form of a sum of money, which is to be placed at the Queen's disposal.

The donations are limited to sums ranging between one penny and one pound.

It is roughly estimated that the Marys number somewhere about three million—that gives one Mary to every three families—and, assuming that each of these sends the minimum subscription of one penny the total will amount to £250,000.

Montreal and the Spanish Inquisition

If a city official can be dismissed because he happens to be the member of a secret society and not because of incompetence or failure to discharge his duty, then we have got back in Canada to the days of the Spanish Inquisition. British law is no respector of creeds or opinions, says the Kingston Standard. If Dr. Louis Laberge, Medical Health Officer for the city of Montreal, has done anything contrary to law, the law will look after him. To be a member of a society which has no illegal aims does not constitute a criminal offence. Dr. Laberge if he is, as charged, a member of Emancipation Lodge of Masons, is therefore strictly within his legal rights in remaining a member, and the Montreal Board of Aldermen are going beyond their rights in dismissing him for this cause.

This is purely a case of persecution and religious bigotry which should not be tolerated in a country where free speech is allowed. We are pleased to note that the Montreal Board of Montreal have refused to accede to the request of the aldermen that Dr. Laberge be dismissed. They have taken the just, broad and liberal view that a man's religious opinions and his right to join a secret society are matters with which they have nothing to do. The only questions they have to consider in such a case are these:—Is Dr. Laberge qualified for the position? Has he done his duty?

We have no place for the methods of the Spanish Inquisition in this free Canada of ours and we thought such methods had long since ceased. Evidently the Montreal Board of Aldermen, the majority of them, are intemperate bigots unfit to occupy any position of public trust.

BERLIN COURT IS SOCIALLY ROTTEN

SAYS A GERMAN CLERGYMAN, NAMED SCHULTE—BAD AS FRANCE UNDER NAPOLEON III.

Wealth is Responsible for Awful Conditions—Industrialism has Been Curse of Germany.

(Special to The Times.)

Berlin, Jan. 21—A vigorous "Sins of Society" agitation has begun in West Germany. It is being carried on by a clergyman named Schulte, apropos of the approaching court season, which the reverend gentleman predicts will be the "wickedest, most gorgeous, and shameless which hitherto relatively modest Germany has known."

"German society," says Herr Schulte, "is in the same perilous condition as was French society under the Third Napoleon; and let it beware lest it bring on Germany a similar awful fate.

"The growth of wealth has utterly corrupted our once plain-living aristocracy. Germany is worse than France, inasmuch as it has twenty courts, and the petty courts, according to their measure, are as evil as the great.

"But worst of all is our newly built commercial aristocracy. These people live like American millionaires with the difference only that divorce is little heard of. That is because marital tolerance goes much further than in America, and not because German family life is any sounder.

"Ten years ago the race-course, restaurant, music hall, and gambling life were subordinate to the great spectacle of a nation in earnest. Now the nation in earnest is obscured by the frivolities of the rich, and the unconcealed, unblushing wickedness of the aristocrat."

Herr Schulte adds that industrialism is a curse, as, owing to it, Germany has grown rich, and lost her ancient solid qualities.

WOMEN WANT MORE CAR STEPS

AN EFFORT TO HARMONIZE THE HOBBLE SKIRT AND STREET RAILWAY.

Women Have Instituted a Crusade for More and Shorter Steps on Trolley Cars.

Providence, R.I., Jan. 23.—In an effort to harmonize the hobble skirts and the accommodation provided the patrons by the local street railway company, 354 of the most influential women of this city and state, members of the Rhode Island Women's Club, have petitioned the city council to institute a crusade for more and shorter steps on trolley cars.

STARTLING CHARGE BY CURFEW CLUB

Washington, Jan. 23.—Hundreds of Washington girls under sixteen years of age are every night drinking highballs, cocktails, absinthe, benedictine and other intoxicating liquors that boys of the same age imbibe, and many of them are frequenting questionable resorts. This is the state of affairs that confronts the fathers and mothers of Washington, according to members of the Washington Curfew Club, who are making a careful investigation of the matter.

When the parents believe them to be at the homes of their friends, at the moving picture theatres, or engaged in other harmless diversions school girls and department store girls of good families nightly, it is asserted, succeed in obtaining intoxicating liquors if they have such desire.

These revelations are declared to have been disclosed through extensive investigation of the Curfew Club. The remedy which the club suggests is the passing of a curfew law which will prevent children remaining on the streets after an early hour at night.

Legislature to Open with Usual Flourish

WILL NOT BE AS BIG A SOCIETY EVENT AS HERETOFORE.

Predicted That the Session Will be a Very Busy One—Cabinet Held a Meeting Yesterday Afternoon.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—At three o'clock to-morrow afternoon, to the accompaniment of cannon shots, and the National Anthem, his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor will declare the Provincial Legislature officially opened for the first time in the present year of grace. Premier Whitney and the other members of the Cabinet held a final meeting at noon to-day, at which the final touches were applied to the speech from the Throne, and with the exception of a few min. or arrangements, everything is now in readiness for the members to take their places on the floor of the House.

The Gubernatorial escort will consist of an infantry guard of honor, a band and cavalry guard, provided by the Royal Canadian Dragoons. A salute of fifteen guns will be fired by the Ninth Field Battery on the West side of the building in the direction of the University grounds.

As a society event, it is anticipated that to-morrow's opening will not be so pretentious as usual, owing to the fact that the Speaker's chambers have not yet been reconstructed, and consequently the customary reception and tea cannot be given.

TONIGHT'S GAME WITH TRENTON

Everything is in readiness for the big game to-night with Trenton. The locals are in shape to go the pace of their lives and it will be hockey from the drop of the hat. A large crowd will be here from Trenton and the visitors are confident of carrying off the honors, while the local fans look for a victory. The team for to-night looks like a winner and it will be first going from the drop, all the way.

The following players will be on the local line-up:

Goal—Derocher.
Point—Glover.
C. Point—Dennison.
Rover—Ray.
Centre—Parke.
R. Wing—Sorel.
L. Wing—Kelly.

STOPS PAIN OF BURNS AND CUTS

Really Wonderful How Zam-Buk Gives Ease.

This is the verdict of all who have tried Zam-Buk. The woman in the home knows best its value. A burn from the stove, from a flat iron, or a hot pan, is instantly soothed by Zam-Buk. When the little ones fall and cut or scratch themselves, Zam Buk stops the pain and, incidentally, their crying. The best proof of this is the fact that children who have once had Zam-Buk applied come for it again.

For more serious burns, too, it is unequalled. Mr. John Johnston, of 734 South Marks Street, Fort William, a moulder in Copp's Foundry, says: "Some time ago I burned the top of my foot severely by dropping some molten iron from a ladle I was carrying. A large hole was burned through my shoe and into the top of my foot. I was taken home and Zam-Buk was applied to the burn directly. It was surprising what relief this balm afforded. The burn was so deep and so serious that it required careful attention, but Zam-Buk prevented other complications arising, and as it was daily applied, soothed the pains and allayed the inflammation. In the course of two weeks the hole burned in my foot had been well healed."

Mr. W. H. Gibson, of Belleville, writes: "We have tried Zam-Buk often on cuts and sores, and I think there is nothing that can equal it."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, eczema, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

Favorable Reports at Board of Health Meeting

Henry Morel, M.P.P.

Nipissing.

CONSIDERABLE BUSINESS TRANSACTED AT YESTERDAY'S MEETING OF THE BOARD.

Dr. McPherson Submitted His Report—Dr. McNulty Was Elected Chairman for the Year.

Considerable business was transacted at the Board of Health meeting yesterday morning.

Dr. McNulty was appointed chairman for the ensuing year.

A request from Mrs. M. Martin, that a sewer be put in on Simcoe street, was referred to the City Engineer.

A bill for $3.08 was presented by A. W. Cressman. Mr. Cressman was asked to inform the Board on whose authority the goods were furnished, and where they were sent.

The garbage and milk questions were also discussed.

Dr. A. W. McPherson read a report as follows:

Gentlemen,—I beg to submit for your consideration a report for the year ending Nov. 30, 1910.

It is with pleasure that I am able to state that during this time the city has been comparatively free from infectious diseases. As might be expected from last year's record scarlet fever heads the list, with thirty-four infected houses, and about sixty cases. Among this number there was but one death. Diptheria was very light. Only three families were affected with a total of seven cases. Small-pox was not represented. Typhoid fever has been very prevalent in the neighborhood, but Peterborough has been remarkably free from it. Only seven cases have been reported. In following up the source, it was ascertained that two resulted from infected wells, one probably because infected while in Toronto; three resulted from contact with persons suffering from the disease, and one the source of which could not be definitely learned. There were no fatal cases. The minor infectious diseases have decreased since last year, with the exception of whooping cough This seems to be fairly widespread throughout the city and vicinity.

It is with regret that I have to report the appearance of a small epidemic of infantile paralysis. Although the cases were not reported, the number might be placed at about ten or twelve with at least three deaths.

In this connection I would like to draw your attention to the new regulations which place infantile paralysis in the list of diseases which must be reported to the Health authorities. I might further add that with the exception of scarlet fever diptheria, small pox and typhoid the various infectious diseases are not reported. If the minor infections were reported as they should be we could get the cooperation of the teachers in controlling the epidemics. In this way the unnecessary exposure at school would be materially lessened and the number of children of school age who are left at home on account of sickness would, in the end, be minimized.

In looking back over the year we can congratulate ourselves on account of progress made. Since the last report an Isolation Hospital, with an accommodation for about 30 patients, has been begun, and it is expected that early in the year it will be ready for occupation. Another move in the right direction is the establishment of a laboratory for the examination of city water. This will obviate the necessity of furnishing a laboratory in connection with the new hospital. But there are still many opportunities for further progress and make questions pertinent to the health of the citizens that must soon be met and seriously considered. To my mind the most serious is the milk supply. The excellent report of the Provincial Milk Commission has brought forcibly to our minds what has been done and is being done in other cities to secure a reasonably pure, clean milk. I would suggest that the matter be considered at an early date. Steps be taken to secure the cooperation

STRICTER STILL ON IMMIGRATION

THE OFFICERS ARE TURNING BACK MORE PEOPLE THAN THEY EVER DID BEFORE.

Scotland Yard is Busy and is Working in Concert With the Dominion

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, Jan 23.—It was announced at the Immigration Department this morning that never before had the authorities turned back so many people under one circumstance or another as they have in the past two weeks, since the excitement of the Houndsditch battle between the London police and the anarchists. The immigration Inspectors at the border and seaports have received instructions to closely watch every suspicious character endeavoring to obtain admittance to Canada, and to refuse him or her entry on the slightest excuse, and to enforce the Immigration Act to the fullest letter.

THE MORNING TIMES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1911.

OUR NEXT GOVERNOR.

The telegraph wires have the Duke of Connaught as the burden of their song these days and a chronicle of their despatches reads about as follows:

Monday—Duke of Connaught expected to be next Governor-General of Canada, nothing sure.

Tuesday—The Duke is thinking the matter over and may say definitely after lunch and a good cigar.

Wednesday—Reports from inner circles say His Royal Highness cannot get away. He may change his mind if he has good lunch at his shooting lodge.

Thursday—Rideau Hall is being turned up-side down and inside out so as to be ready for the Duke.—Later—flash: the Duke has put his glasses on to read what the newspapers have mapped out for him.

Friday—The Duke of Connaught would like to be Governor-General but is afraid he would not be able to get into some of the exclusive social circles at Ottawa.

Saturday—There is a well defined rumor that the Duke of Connaught has suggested that he be relieved from the Governor-Generalship of Canada and that Joe Martin, M. P., be appointed in his stead. This report could not be verified.

Sunday—The Government has received no official advice that the Duke will come to Canada, but this is a trivial matter. He will likely be too busy getting ready to tell the Government until he arrives at Ottawa.

DEATH OF BLACK BILL

The Steed Was Well Cared for in His Old Age

Black Bill, the noble equine which did duty for the Kent Mills for 27 years, is dead. He died recently on the farm of William Weaver in Chetham township, where he was out in pasture. The famous horse was 33 years of age, and was a general favorite with the employes of the Kent Mills. The employes are naturally sorry to lose him, although he has not been on duty for two years. When he was incapacitated for work through old age, another horse was put in his place, and his latter years were spent in a comfortable stable during the winter and in a healthy pasture in the summer. Some of the men from the mill went out to the farm to give this old and faithful servant a decent burial.

CARE OF THE HAIR

Have your own brush and comb and keep them clean and free from dust.

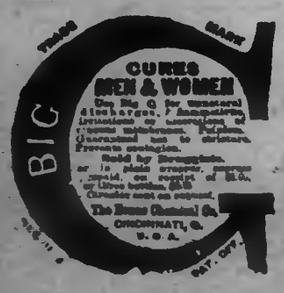
Ammonia in warm water is splendid for cleaning brushes.

A good shampoo is made by rubbing in the yolk of an egg, with or without bay rum. Rinse in moderately warm soft water.

A hair wash for oily hair is made from one-half ounce powdered camphor, one-half ounce powdered borax to a quart of soft water. Use a teacupful in warm water and some good soap. Rinse well.

For sick people or those who catch cold when taking the ordinary water shampoo, a good cleanser is odorless gasoline. Moisten a piece of cashmere (it has no lint) with the gasoline. Divide the hair in strands and rub the scalp well. Then comb gently with a fine comb.

Sage wash made by putting a tablespoon of powdered sage and a teaspoon of borax in the first water, is strengthening to the hair.



THE RED YEAR

—By—

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED.)

"Speak, sug," he said. "What o Fattehpore and Allahabad, and b sure thou hast spent thy last hour i thou liest."

"Sahib, God knoweth that I can tell thee naught of Allahabad, but the b d mashes at Fattehpore have risen, and Tucker-sahib is dead. They killed hi I have heard, after a fight on the ro of the cutcherry."

Malcolm guessed rightly that Mr Tucker was the judge at that station but he must not betray ignorance.

"And the others—they also dead? What of them?" he said, knowing th the scenes enacted elsewhere mu have had their counterpart at Fatteh pore.

"Wow!" The kneeling man lisped as the sword pricked him and "There are two memsahibs in a house on the ghat. They alone remain of t white crossed. And I saved them, sahib. I swear it, by the Kaaba, I saved them."

"They are young, doubtless, a good looking?"

A new fear shone in the Mohammedan's eyes, and he did not answer. Frank's gorge rose with a deadly disgust, and it is hard to say that his sword would not have gone home in another instant had not Chumru interfered:

"Kill him not yet, sahib. He may be useful. Bind him and the other slave back to back. Then I shall help you to truss them properly."

Chumru soon showed that he meant business. When he was free to replace the pistol in the holster, which he did all the more readily since he had never used a fire-arm in his life, he gagged master and man with skilful thoroughness, tied them to a tree, and then unfolded the plan which the ekka-driver's story had suggested.

The fever of rebellion had spread along the whole of the left bank of the Ganges as far as Allahabad. A party of fugitives from Fattehpore who had taken to a boat were pursued, captured and slain. Two girls who had managed to cross the river unseen were now lodged in a go-down, or warehouse, belonging to the very man whom chance had made Malcolm's prisoner. He was keeping them to curry favor with a local rajah who headed the outbreak at Fattehpore. It was true that there were no boats left on this side of the river; they were all on the opposite bank, being loaded with loot, and the two Englishwomen were merely awaiting the return of the zemindar's budgerow to be sent to a fate worse than death.

Chumru, a Mohammedan himself, was not greatly concerned about the misfortunes of a couple of women, but he saw plainly that Malcolm could no more hope to escape under the present conditions than the poor creatures whose whereabouts had just become known. This was precisely the blend of intrigue and adventure that appealed to his alert intelligence. In wriggling through a mesh of difficulties he was lithe as a snake, and the proposal he now made was certainly bold enough to commend itself to the most daring.

He drew Malcolm and the trembling ryot apart.

"Listen, friend," said he to the latter. "Thou art, indeed, lost if that fat hog sees thee again. He will harry thee and thy wife and all thy family to death for having helped us, and it will be in vain to protest that thou hadst no mind in the matter, for behold, thou didst not lift a finger when I threatened him with the pistol."

"Protector of the poor, what was one to do?" whined the ryot.

"I am not thy protector. 'Tis the sahib here to whom thou must look for counsel. Attend, now, and I will show thee a road to safety and riches. Art thou known to either of those men?"

"I have not seen them before, for I come this way but seldom."

"'Tis well. The sahib shall sit in the ekka, with the curtains drawn, while I give it out that I go with my wife to take the miss-sahibs across the river, for which purpose the worthy zemindar will presently hand us a written order, as he hath ink, paper and pen in the ekka. Thou shalt be driver and come with us on the box, and when we are in mid-stream, as the sahib appears at my signal, see that thou hast a cudgel handy if it be needed. Then, when we reach Allahabad, God willing, the sahib will give thee many rupees and none will be the wiser. What say'st thou?"

"I am a poor man—"

"Ay, keep to that. 'Tis ever a safe answer. Do you like my notion, sahib? Otherwise, we must take our chance and wander in the jungle."

The fact that Chumru's scheme included the rescue of the unhappy girls imprisoned in the godown caused Malcolm to approve it without reserve. The zemindar's gag was removed and he was asked his name.

"Hossein Beg," said he.

"Be assured, then," said Malcolm, sternly, "that thy life depends on the fulfilment of the instructions I now require of thee. See to it, therefore, that they are written in such wise as to insure success, and I, for my part, promise to send thee succor ere night falls. Write on this tablet that the miss-sahibs are to be delivered to the charge of Rissaldar Ali Khan and his wife, for conveyance to Fattehpore, and bid thy servants help the rissaldar in every possible way. Believe me, if aught miscarries in this matter, thou shalt rot to death in thy bonds."

"Let my servant go with your honor, so that all things may be done according to your honor's wishes."

"What then? Wouldst thou juggle with the favor I have shown thee?"

This time the sword impinged on the Adam's apple in Hossein Beg's throat, and he shrank as far as his bonds would permit.

"May not so, Khudawand," he gurgled. "I swear by my father's bones I meant no ill."

"Mayhap. Nevertheless, I shall take care thy intent is honest, Hossein Beg. Write now and pay heed to thy words, else jackals shall rend thee ere to-morrow's dawn."

By this time the man was reduced to a state of abject submission. Possibly his offer of the ekka-wallah's services was made in good faith, but Malcolm liked the looks of the man as little as he liked the looks of his master, and he preferred to trust Chumru's nimble wits rather than the stupid contriving of a peasant, no matter how willing the latter might be.

The zemindar, having written, was gagged again, and the pair were left

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car, should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When It is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

HOW TO TREAT WINTER COUGHS

Aged People and Children are Often Sorely Afflicted During the Cold Weather

Many aged people regularly develop a cough the beginning of every winter, which lasts until the warm season. They often shut themselves in, and do not look out of doors, for fear of taking cold, until May weather comes again.

But they have one cold after another, and when really wintry weather comes they grow thin, become pale, weak, and anaemic, and expect to die each winter. Nevertheless, when the warm weather comes, and a more active out-of-doors life, they pick up again, and pass the summer months with comfort.

Much can be done to lessen the severity of these coughs and improve the general health and prolong life.

The quantity and quality of the food should be strictly regulated, so as to avoid over-eating, thus taxing the liver kidneys, and impeding the action of the heart and lungs. Flesh meats should be only eaten once a day, and in moderate quantity. Good milk, eggs, bread, butter, with ripe fruit, and a moderate amount of fresh vegetables and salads, is the ideal diet for these patients. Alcoholic drinks should be avoided.

Good Ventilation

Well-ventilated sleeping-rooms, and as much out-of-door exercise daily as will make them tired, without extreme fatigue, should be taken summer and winter. Twice a week the patient should have a warm bath to induce free perspiration, and then a cold sponge after.

Anaemic patients need treatment to improve the digestion, and gentle massages, oil rubs, and cold short sponges daily.

They should not shut themselves up in the house, but get out of doors in the sun every clear day in the winter.

A hot fomentation over the chest at bed-time, followed by an oil-rub, will often relieve the cough, and insure a good night's sleep.

There should be free action of the bowels daily. A high dry, bracing place, where the patient can spend a large portion of the daytime in the open air, and inhale outside air at night, will greatly benefit all these patients. Often they will be so much better as to almost forget they were ever sufferers from asthma, chronic cough, shortness of breath, and a weak heart.

Coughs in Children

In children one of the most frequent causes of persistent cough is the stopping up of the nostrils by what is known as adnoid growths. A great many of these children are mouth breathers. The throat becomes dry and irritated, rest is disturbed, and the digestive organs are interfered with. The cough and difficult breathing are often aggravated by errors in diet. We find these little patients often ill after some holiday feast, when the stomach has been upset by too much rich food.

A persistent cough in children is sometimes due to chronic constipation, and ceases as soon as the bowels become regular. Living in rooms with leaking gas, oil lamps, and chimneys with defective flues which do not draw well, cause an irritation.

Find Out the Cause

In a great many cases a doctor will be required to remove the growth in the nostrils and cure the little one of the habit of breathing through the mouth. It often takes a great deal of care and watching to break the habit of mouth-breathing. Such children should not breathe either too hot or dry air, or pass suddenly from an over-heated atmosphere to one cold and damp.

For a child over three years, unless very weak, the neck and chest should be sponged with cold water daily, to accustom the skin to endure sudden changes of weather. The legs and feet should be kept dry, and the habit of changing the footwear should be formed. Sitting round a fire in damp shoes and stockings has caused much ill-health both in adults and children.

A steam inhalation at bedtime, with a warm drink, a thorough oil rubbing both back and front, until the skin is red, will often relieve the tendency to cough.

WINDOW GARDENING

Plants Even in Winter Require Plenty of Fresh Air

There is far more opening for the display of taste and skill in the planning and raising of a really pretty "window garden" than is commonly allowed.

A point for the window-gardener to remember in winter is that plants of which the roots are saturated in water are more likely to suffer from frost than if kept rather dry.

Window plants, like all others, require plenty of fresh air, and it is a common mistake to keep these grown in pots inside a close room through the winter instead of on the window-sill. The result is usually that they suffer from the attacks of insects.

EXERCISE THE HOGS

Exercise is a part of the hog's life which is generally allowed to take care of itself. The result is that generally the hog either does not get enough of it, or else he gets too much. Exercise in like feed, or heat or cold, or almost anything else. Enough is just right. It is not a hard thing to regulate in a reasonable way and with very little care or trouble either, if one only takes the time to think about it. Exercise plays a great part in the physical development of any living animal, and this is especially true of young animals when growing.

STRUCK A LION

Fulton Entered a Cage Where There Were Five Cubs

Some little excitement was created among visitors to Bostock and Wombwell's menagerie, located in Allen Public Park, by a local publican, named William Fulton, entering alone a cage containing five large-sized lion cubs. One of the animals came forward and Fulton smacked it on the nose with his hand, and it retreated. He remained inside about five minutes and was loudly cheered when he stepped from the cage.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

USES FOR LAUNDRY STARCH

Common lump starch powdered makes a very good silver polish. It can be rubbed on dry or with a wet cloth and polished with chamois.

A white table oil cloth that has become dingy can be whitened by sprinkling the surface with a handful of starch, rubbing with a very damp cloth and drying with a clean soft one.

To remove bloodstains from material, make a thick paste of clean lump starch, cover the spots, and lay in bright sunshine. When dry rub off, and if the stain is not fully removed, repeat the process.

Stains can be removed from wallpaper by an application of starch, and it also makes a very good substitute for whiting when washing windows.

Fine old lace can be made to look like new if laid away in dry starch for several hours and then hung on the clothes line for some hours.

After the linoleum has been washed and dried some thin boiled starch rubbed lightly over it will give it a polished shiny surface, which has the advantage of being bright without being slippery.

Starch for Blouses

If a lump of soda the size of a nut is added to the starch in which blouses, overalls, and children's pinafores are wrung through they will have a lovely gloss and will be much easier to iron. They should be rolled up when damp and left for a short time before ironing.

Save Your Starch

After using a bowl of starch do not throw away what remains of the mixture. Place on one side, and when the starch has settled pour off the clear water, then place the bowl in the oven for five minutes, and the starch will be found a hard cake, and can be put away ready for use another time, when it will be found as good as new.

CROPS WERE GOOD

In Lanark County, Ontario, This Year —Some Figures

South Lanark is among the favored counties this year. The crops were on the average very good. The yield of hay was abundant and it was saved in first-class condition. The grain crop was everything that could be desired. It stood up well, which facilitated the cutting of it very much. The straw was fairly large, and, as a rule, it was free from rust. The threshed grain weighed well, and one man said his best grain yielded 45 bushels per acre, and on an average it went 40 bushels per acre. Wheat, also, was a good crop, and the grain threshed out a good return. Considerable quantities of corn was grown, and despite the difficulty of getting good seed and good germination, the crop was one of the best they have had for some years. During the summer and late spring the rainfall was a little short of that needed for the best plant growth and seed development, but nevertheless the crops are indeed satisfactory with the exception of potatoes, and they are rotting somewhat rapidly.

Quite a number of the farmers have gone in for silos, and they are well pleased with them and think their money well invested. They claim that it enables them to keep a greater amount of stock, which coincides with the findings of other farmers who have tried silos.

The people have all the manure hauling done, and the fall plowing is well advanced and by the time Jack Frost pays his usual visit the plowing will be done and the soil ready for the action of the frost.

USE CLOVER THRESHER

Men who make a practice of growing clover for seed, as a rule, use a special clover thresher, but it is possible to thresh clover with a common mill. It is necessary, however, to run the clover through several times, which makes it a slow process. In running through the first time, remove the fanner belt and allow the seed and heads to fall under the mill where the ordinary small oats gather, and transfer the clover straw to the mow. Run the heads and seed through again in the same manner. In running it through the third time, put on very little wind and continue to run it through until all the seed has been removed from the heads.

A LEADER OF WOMEN

As a girl of seventeen, Miss Macarthur, the secretary of the Women's Trade Union League, who has been attending the Trade Union Congress on behalf of her sex, took the keenest interest in the welfare of the working woman. The daughter of a Scottish manufacturer, she came to London after acting as her father's secretary, and was pressed into the service of the Women's Trade Union League by Lady Dilke. When she first became secretary the League had 40,000 members. That was about eight years ago. To-day there are close upon 200,000. Miss Macarthur holds that, in spite of many reasons to the contrary, women take more interest in their unions than do the men. "It is all nonsense," she says, "this talk that women cannot be successfully organized."

HIS NARROWEST ESCAPE

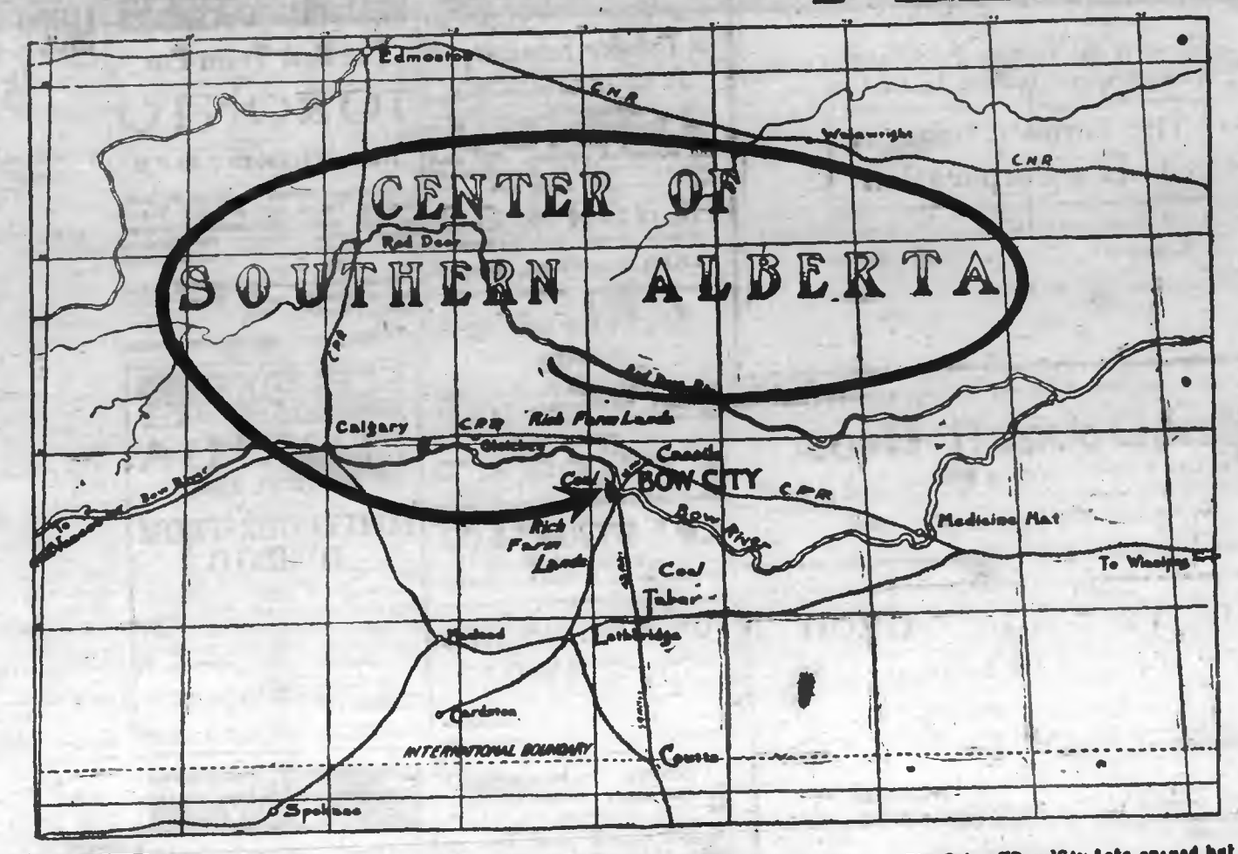
Mr. F. C. Selous, the famous sportsman, tells an exciting story of the narrowest escape he ever had from death. In 1878 he, with three other hunters, encountered a herd of elephants close to the Umbila River. "This herd," says Mr. Selous, "numbered some seventy or eighty animals of which we killed twenty-two of the largest tuskers. We had had a long day before we came up with the elephants, and the subsequent galloping about after a time completely exhausted my horse. The fourth elephant I shot, a big bull, charged and very nearly overtook my tired horse his terrific trumpeting sounding like an advancing locomotive. However he [illegible] to catch me, and consequently I killed him."

ONLY ONE CHANGE

In the Person of J. P. Downey was Appointed to Orillia Asylum

When the Legislative Assembly reassembles on January 24th it will be noticed that only one change has taken place in the membership since the prorogation in 1910. Mr. J. P. Downey, who was the member for South Wellington, was appointed superintendent of the Orillia Asylum, and was succeeded by Mr. J. Ransom Hewitt, a young lawyer of Guelph, who was elected by acclamation.

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"



If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor prices.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when "he comes of age that lot will be worth consid- "erable money and will provide a handsome "stake for him in life; it is at least most sub- "stantial life insurance—sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Albert has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid—a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no licenses shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your application by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

GENERAL BOOTH'S REPLY

He Answers Attacks on the Salvation Army

Addressing a large audience at the Grand Theatre, Battersea, General Booth replied to charges made against the administration of the Salvation Army. A good deal of ignorance, he said, still prevailed regarding the work of the Salvation Army, and, as in the early days of the movement, scandalous and false representations were made about them and industriously circulated. Some people used to say that he was a despot, who ruled his people with a rod of iron—(laughter)—crushed and enslaved them.

Four people were told that "the general" was piling up a colossal fortune for himself and for his family, but those detractors failed to state how it was that "the general," ever since the Salvation Army started, forty-five years ago, had never taken a shilling from its coffers for his own support. (Loud applause.)

The same people whispered that "the general" lived in magnificence, occupied a princely mansion, and seldom ate except out of silver dishes. (Laughter). Nobody had ever seen him living in an extravagant mansion of his own, and the motor-car in which he sometimes rode was hired and used in following the footsteps of his Master in seeking and saving the lost.

It was also alleged that the Salvation Army and its general did not publish audited accounts or a properly endorsed balance-sheet. At the same time, those people failed to tell the public that the accounts of the Salvation Army were absolutely in the hands of one of the first accountants of the City of London who had the most perfect control over them. They also failed to state that ever since the Salvation Army came into existence every year a balance-sheet had been regularly delivered at the homes of its subscribers. A balance-sheet was within reach of anyone who liked to take the trouble to look for it.

COMPANIONS IN DEATH

Stricken by Illness, Girl Friends Die, as They Wished, Together

Two coffins, covered with rich floral emblems, were lowered into one grave in the presence of a great mourning congregation near Carrick-on-Shannon, Leitrim. The scene closed the pathetic life-story of two inseparable girl companions. Bridget Reman and Mary Doherty. The girls, who were Roman Catholics, had grown up intimate friends and neighbors from childhood, and both were exceedingly popular in their district. But some time ago they both developed consumption. By a remarkable coincidence they were both attacked by the fatal disease about the same time, and it made equal progress with each of them. It took an incurable turn in both a month or so ago.

Recognising that they must prepare for death, the companions, who had just turned twenty years of age, expressed the wish that it might overtake both on the same day. They communicated with each other daily to the end, and believed that their wish not to be separated in life would be answered.

And the most remarkable fact in the history followed: both the girls passed calmly away at the same hour.

CARRIED 40,000,000 BRICKS

Edward Ashbee, an employe of the High Brooms Brick Company, near Tunbridge Wells, holds the record of having carried considerably over 40,000,000 bricks on a wheelbarrow in the past thirty years. The weight of the bricks is estimated at nearly 120,000 tons, and in the course of his work he has walked nearly 55,000 miles.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.R. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Mairs, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayfleete, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

MUCH PROGRESS IN GOOD ROADS

A Glance at What Has Been Accomplished in Improving the Public Highways

At the coming session of the Legislature, the annual report of the deputy-minister of public works on highway improvement, will doubtless prove of considerable interest, showing, as it will, that much progress has been made during the past year. The session of 1910 was the last in which Mr. A. W. Campbell, for many years deputy-minister and a recognized leader in the good-roads movement, made his report. Last year the province lost his services, Mr. Campbell being secured by the Dominion Government.

Mr. W. A. McLean, C.E., formerly provincial engineer of highways, succeeded Mr. Campbell, and his first report will no doubt indicate that the year 1910 saw considerable advance in the building of better roads. The exact figures are not available, but the total cost of the county systems up to the end of 1909, of $2,128,000, was substantially increased. In each of the seventeen counties that have undertaken the designation of main roads and the construction of highways, meriting a provincial contribution of one-third, further work has been accomplished, many miles of first-class road being added.

The Wentworth county system, established in 1902, the first in the province, was completed during 1910, so far as macadamizing was concerned. Henceforth expenditure will only be necessary on the county roads, for maintenance. The roads, however, are of such a character that they will be object lessons for the townships in improving the highways not included in the county system. The county owns two steam rollers, a horse roller, five stone crushers, a steam drill, scrapers, and other implements; and with these, they will be able to keep the roads in first-class shape.

The metalling of Lanark county roads has also been completed, while in Simcoe, Oxford, Halton, Wellington Hastings, Lincoln, Prince Edward, Middlesex, Frontenac, Peel and Lennox and Addington, well sustained efforts approaching completion have been made.

In those counties that have more recently adopted a county roads system, special attention has been directed to the construction of bridges and culverts, all of which are of a more modern type than were built a few years ago.

Much of this kind of work, too, has been done by counties which have hesitated so far to take advantage of the Government's offer. It is hoped that when more of this has been completed these counties will fall into line for the building of roads proper.

Perhaps the most important advance made by the good roads movement during the past year was Toronto's voting of $100,000 toward the improvement of York county roads. The county has agreed to spend a similar sum, a third $100,000 to be contributed by the Provincial Government.

This means that during the coming summer work will be started on the improvement, among others, of the first highway of importance in Ontario. It is interesting to recall that Yonge Street was opened for thirty miles northerly from Lake Ontario, about 1796, Lieut.-Governor Simcoe building it as a military road to afford a short and safe route to Lake Huron and the north.

General Simcoe's regiment, the Queen's Rangers, chopped out Yonge Street, through the bush, but it was not until twenty-one years later, in 1817, that wagons could use it. Then it had not as straight a course as it has now, but gradually the route was shortened and the hills graded. The roadway was macadamized as far as Holland's Landing by the year 1850. By this time the traffic had grown to be immense.

In other parts of the province roads had been opened, and it was estimated that by 1850 the province of Upper Canada had expended $2,500,000. Most of these early roads were covered with planks, only a few being surfaced with macadam. They were sold to private companies by the Government where the counties took no action to assume control.

In the intervening years great changes have taken place. The present outlook is that in addition to the county of York other counties will shortly undertake the good roads projects that have proved so successful. Elgin county council last year declined to assume control of the main roads, but it is likely that in a few years at most this county will fall in line. Among the chief prospects for 1910 is the county of Norfolk, which is seriously considering the matter.

It may be that a further announcement will be made by the Government this session in regard to a provincial system of highways. In this connection it has been pointed out that the province could soon have a revenue from motor vehicles of $100,000 a year, which would pay the interest on $2,500,000. Those who favor such a provincial system have in mind the creation of an Ontario highway commission, formed on the line of the T. & N. O. Railway commission, and the encouragement of the scientific study of highway construction.

Though no official intimation has been given, it is not unlikely that some legislation will be enacted at the coming session of the Legislature looking toward the ultimate establishment of a provincial system; and in the meantime, of further encouraging the remaining counties to assume the responsibility of the main roads and to bring them up to the standard set by the counties already sharing in the provincial grants.

Fools Have Hindsight Wise Have Foresight

Talk with fools and they will tell you how, if they had made certain investments 30 years ago, they would be rolling in wealth today.

Talk to wise old investors, the inventory of whose holdings read like a dream of marvelous good luck, and you will find that when they bought they had no "sure thing"—they had to take chances.

The "sure thing" investments of today were the "speculations" of yesterday. The "speculative stocks" of today will be the guaranteed dividend-payers of tomorrow. Take a chance.

Treasury stock in the Mexico Mining, Refining and Exploration company can be bought today for less than ever it can be again. The mine which we have been developing for almost two years is now on the eve of bearing income. Your Luck will be Good or Bad, just as you decide—whether to come in or stay out. Decide NOW! A line from you will give you all necessary information. Act Now.

ANIMAL CRIES NEARLY HUMAN

Notes That Resemble Those of the Human Voice

Of the animal cries that most clearly produce upon the hearer the effect of the human voice most are found in the case of birds. While the parrot is the best known of birds possessing the power of imitating the human voice, as a matter of fact its voice is decidedly inferior to that of the mina, a species of starling. Strange to say, the male starling speaks in a high, clear note, like that of a child, while the female's register discloses a markedly gruff note. The Australian bird called the laughing jackass utters a peculiar cry very much like that of a troop of boys shouting, whooping, and laughing in chorus. Another Australian bird, the morepork, is frequently heard strenuously demanding "more pork" in stentorian tones. The whippoorwill demands his punishment in a distinct imitation of the human voice, and the command of the guinea fowl to come back could easily be mistaken for the tone of the human. The cries of seals lamenting the loss of their young very closely approach the human note, while the cry of the wounded hare or fawn has been held to be distressingly like that of a child in sore straits.

HOW TO BLACKEN BROWN BOOTS

Take a piece of washing soda the size of a walnut and dissolve it in a cupful of boiling water. When cool rub boots well with it, and set them to dry. When dry give the boots a good coat of burnishing ink, to be obtained at the currier's or leather merchant (ordinary ink will not do). When this has dried in, clean them well with a good boot polish. They will then look as good as new.

CARE OF CARPETS

Instead of using tea leaves, which are apt to stain a carpet, try the following:—Steep a newspaper in lukewarm water, then squeeze out tear in small pieces, scatter over the carpet, and it can then be swept in comfort, the damp paper collecting the dust and fluff in a surprising manner. Go over the carpet with a cloth wrung out of clean water, to which a tablespoonful of turpentine has been added, and the carpet will look fresh and new again.

ABOUT MEERSCHAUM

Meerschaum is not, as some people imagine, the foam of the sea, but is a soft, soapilke stone, which is mined like coal. In Asia Minor its mining is an important business. Pits are first dug, and so soon as a vein of meerschaum is struck horisontal galleries are laid out. These galleries are often very long, and they vary in depth from 25 to 150 feet. The crude meerschaum, which is called "hamtash," is yellowish white in color, and a red clay envelopes it. The blocks are sold on the spot at from $35 to $300 a cartload according to their quality. They are then soft enough to cut with a knife butt hey are dried before being exported.

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

GEORGE A CRICKETER

As a "Middy" He Used to Indulge in the Game and Subsequently Played in a Match

There is only one occasion recorded in which the late King took part in a formal match, namely, when in 1885 he assisted I Zingari to defeat the Gentlemen of Norfolk at Sandringham, and was bowled by the first ball he received.

Early in the 'sixties, when the professional cricketer attached to Eton College was the well-known Cambridgeshire player, F. Bell, he was not infrequently summoned to Windsor Castle to bowl to the Prince of Wales and the other young and Royal members of the household. But, alas! it has to be recorded that on his return from one of these expeditions he made the direful announcement that he "couldn't make a job of 'em at all."

King George, as well as his brother, the late Duke of Clarence, took an active interest in the game. His Majesty, indeed, who as a "middy" used to indulge in the game on the deck of the Bacchante, at the conclusion of one day's racing at Goodwood some years ago played in a match in Goodwood Park that was got up between the guests at Goodwood House. The team included His Majesty and an eleven trained by M. Cannon, the famous jockey. The former is credited with having possessed one of the most expensive bats in existence, the blade being of walnut and the hat being mounted in silver. A peculiarity with regard to the King's favorite bat, by the way, lies in the fact that high up on the blade on either side of the splice appear the famous three feathers that form the crest of the Prince of Wales.

Queen Victoria witnessed more than one cricket match, but never one that may with accuracy be described as a first-class fixture. On August 3rd, 1859, she, together with the Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal Family, witnessed a very close game at Osborne between the Royal Household at Osborne and the officers and men of the Royal yacht, which was won by the former by the narrow margin of twelve runs. The match was particularly interesting for the reason that the late Prince Leopold undertook the duties of scorer, whilst figuring on the side of the sailors we find the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, one line of the scoresheet reading:—

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, b Head, 10; c Cole, b Archer, 2.

FOUND HIS BONES

Skeleton Believed to be That of Murdered Envoy Brought to Light in German Wood

A skeleton found in a wood near the village of Quitzow, Germany, may turn out to be that of Lord Bathurst, the English Ambassador at Vienna, who disappeared on the 25th of November, 1809, as he was returning to England.

The Ambassador's mysterious disappearance caused great excitement throughout Europe. Early in the spring of 1809, Lord Bathurst had been sent on a secret mission to the Vienna Court, and at the conclusion of the peace meeting at Schonbrum, on the 18th of October of the same year, he received orders to return home. He started on the journey, and travelled from Berlin under the name of Koch, a merchant. On November 25 he arrived in Perleberg. Here he entered an hotel beside the posting station. In the evening, when the journey should have been resumed, Lord Bathurst was missing. His overcoat was found later on a heap of wood in the cellar of the posting station, and his leggings in a wood near the village of Quitzow.

There was a secret military inquiry into Lord Bathurst's disappearance, and a rumor was circulated that he had been murdered by the order of Napoleon. This rumor was credited in some quarters, as, at the time, the enmity against France in England had reached its highest stage.

When the inquiry into the envoy's disappearance came to naught, prominent criminologists and historians occupied themselves with the case without, however, arriving at any conclusion.

Now, near the same spot where Lord Bathurst's leggings were found, a man's skeleton has been discovered. It is believed to be that of the English Ambassador.

THE SEAMAN BARONET

Sir Claude Robert Campbell, fourth baronet, of Guilford Street, W.C., who served before the mast on the sailing ship Sutherlandshire from 1898 to 1900, and who succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father, the third baronet, in 1898, and died at sea on July 25 or 26, 1900, in an attempt to swim ashore for assistance for the rest of the crew when the ship was wrecked, left estate now valued for probate at £253. A similar case of a titled gentleman serving before the mast was recently mentioned in the Probate Court, when the Earl of Egmont's estate was valued at £14,750. His lordship, after a long service at sea, became a London fireman, and was for some time keeper of the Vestry Hall at Chelsea.

MEN'S HATS IN CHURCH

The question of women wearing hats in church recalls the fact that men also formerly wore theirs at worship.

Pepys shows that in the seventeenth century both men and women wore their hats to worship.

"To church," he writes, "and heard a simple fellow open the praise of church musique, and exclaiming against men wearing their hats on in the church."

Later he notes that he saw a minister "preach with his hat off . . . which I never saw before."

The hat was then an integral part of both male and female costume, and Pepys catches "a strange cold in my head by flinging off my hat at dinner."

AN IMPRESSIVE SIGHT

Giant Iceberg Seen in the South Atlantic

Probably one of the largest icebergs seen of recent years near the track of ocean-going steamers was viewed from the liner Oravia as she passed the Falkland Islands in the South Atlantic on her way to Liverpool. A graphic description of the monster berg was given by an officer of the ship. "The night was cloudy," he said. "There was a cutting wind and the temperature of the sea was down to 32 degrees when the great iceberg came into view—a huge mass 500 feet high, partly covered with mist, a long shelving shore of ice, with the sea breaking upon it as upon a wide, desolate beach. When the moon revealed the sight was one never to be forgotten. We gazed upon what seemed to be a floating city of ice as large as Liverpool, with its towers, its temples, its tapering monuments, shooting up in fantastic architecture, shimmering in the moonlight like polished silver. It is the lot of few to see such a sight." Everyone on board the Oravia was spellbound by the majestic beauty of the scene. The berg, which was visible for some hours, is supposed to be the detached portion of a permanent Antarctic icefield.

THE NAVY'S DIRIGIBLE

An Accident Has Occurred to Delay the Launching of the Mysterious Craft

Few undertakings have been respon the rigid dirigible balloon that is being built at Barrow for the Navy. Early in the year it figured in the War Secretary's statement in the House of Commons as evidence of the Army Council's attentiveness to the subject of aerial navigation. At frequent intervals it has been described in the newspapers, usually in the redundant terms of appreciation, which, in connection with aeronautical matters, the public appear to love. Thus, the size, speed, cost, armament and general utility of the new vessel, were all tremendous; it was being built under an armed guard, its secrets evidently being of the highest import, and so on, for the past ten months.

It now appears certain that the launching will not take place this year; that there has been an accident by which part of the vessel has been destroyed.

"POINTS" OF THE FACE

Here are a number of "points" in the face which are generally supposed to indicate character:—

Brown eyes are most kindly.

Black eyes are the most rash and impetuous.

A pouting upper lip indicates timidity.

An insignificant nose indicates an insignificant man.

Very large thick lips are a sign of sensuality.

An open mouth is a sure sign of an empty head.

Coarse hair always indicates coarse organization.

Large ears are found on the heads of coarse people.

A projecting upper lip shows malignity and avarice.

Pointed noses generally indicate meddlesome people.

A retreating chin is always bad, it shows lack of resolution.

Large eyes in a small face always betoken maliciousness.

Blue eyes belong to a people of an enthusiastic turn of mind.

Oblique eyes are unfavorable; they show cunning and deceit.

Short, thick, curly hair is an indication of great natural strength.

Freckles, like red hair, are an indication of an ardent temperament.

A long forehead indicates intelligence; a short forehead activity.

Grey eyes are generally found associated with prudence and foresight.

An irregular knotty forehead is a sure sign of a bold, original, and investigating mind.

Prominent, arched, eyebrows show great power of perception in regard to form and color. All great painters have such brows.

Large clear blue eyes generally denote persons of great capacity, but sensitive, suspicious, and often unreasonably jealous.

Horizontal eyebrows, full and regular, show great understanding, deliberation, and capacity for planning and execution.

The typical religious enthusiast has a thin, pale face, retreating forehead, small, keen eyes, pointed nose, and retreating chin.

A perpendicular, a very high, or a very short forehead is always bad; either invariably indicates lack of sympathy.

A face which does not change expression in conversation either indicates caution or stupidity.

A flat forehead or an abrupt descent at the back of the head are both unfavorable, either indicating limited understanding.

A person who habitually looks out of the corners of his eyes is to be avoided; his natural tendency is certainly towards deception.

Large noses are invariably associated with strong traits of character; whether good or bad is determined by other characteristics.

Men of marked ability in any line have usually one deep, perpendicular wrinkle on the forehead, with one or two parallel to it on each side.

RACY METAPHOR

The Archbishop of Canterbury is a great example of a ready wit, according to the Pathfinder. He was going with a number of clergymen in to a luncheon, after some ecclesiastical function one day, when some dignitary observed:

"Now to put a bridle on our appetites!"

Quick as lightning the archbishop retorted, "Say, rather, now to put a bit between our teeth."

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skilful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $18 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment."

DEFENCE RESTS IN SCHENK CASE.

Witness Testifies of Confident Opinion That Schenk Was Dosed with Arsenic—Defence Witness Creates Some Sensation.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 21.—The defence in the Schenk case rested at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon.

No indication was given this morning as to the names of witnesses that would be called.

Dr. S. L. Jepson, who examined Schenk in company with Dr. Hupp, the prosecution's star, was put on the stand. The witness told of having visited Schenk in the hospital and making various tests.

NO DOUBT ABOUT ARSENIC.

"From what you learned," asked Attorney J. J. P. O'Brien, "plus what Dr. Hupp told you, did you not come to the conclusion that he was suffering from gastric trouble, and not a result of arsenic poisoning?"

"No, I could not say that. He had evidently had some arsenic."

On cross-examination he said that Schenk was undoubtedly a big, healthy man before his alleged poisoning, and had lost much weight since. He admitted that all symptoms which he found indicated that Schenk was suffering from chronic lead poison and also arsenic poisoning.

NO LOVE LOST.

Mrs. Jane Hedges furnish the first real thrill for the defence. On direct examination she said: "Albert Schenk told me that John had bought his wife a $6000 automobile and that he said he hopes she breaks her neck the first time she goes out in it. I will leave no stone unturned to get rid of that woman and another out of the family."

Miss Blodgett's Meetings.

Miss Blodgett, who has been giving lectures in the Y.W.C.A. hall for the past week, will hold meetings in Murray street church for the remainder of this week.

The meetings are called for 3.30 o'clock, the first one starting this afternoon.

TRENT CANAL BRIDGES.

Work Stopped for the Winter—New Tugs and Scows Building.

Keene, Jan. 23.—The work on the Canal has been closed down for the Trent bridge section of the Trent winter. At Hastings the concrete work on the bridge over the race is well under way and excavation finished for all but one section of the approach. A new tug and scows for the company will be constructed during the winter.

the dairy men and the milk vendors.

Another problem is the sanitary work. At present, as you are aware, the sanitary work forms part of the police duty. It seems to me that this is sufficient importance to warrant the appointment of a sanitary inspector. From the standpoint of beauty, as well as physical comfort and health, we should insist on proper standard of cleanliness of the lanes, back yards, vacant lots and out-houses. This cannot be satisfactorily accomplished under the present system and if the milk question is considered, as it doubtless will, there will be additional duties for such an officer.

Last year I suggested the advisability of a scavenger system. From the financial as well as the sanitary standpoint, this seems most expedient.

A. W. McPHERSON.

Moved by Dr. Young, seconded by Mayor Morrow, that the report be adopted.—Carried.

Thinks Col. Sam Hughes Libelled

St. Catharines, Ont., Jan. 23.—Quite a sensation is being caused by a charge which was made by Col. Sam. Hughes, M.P., against Editor Macdonald, of The Globe, before a Conservative smoker here on Friday evening. Col. Hughes is credited with making the following statement: "Dr. Jas. A. Macdonald, was sent to Washington to open up the question of reciprocity. He is to-day in the pay of Mr. Gimm, a prominent Boston publisher, receiving $2,500 a year to preach reciprocity. He was offered several thousand a year to give his whole time to this fad of union between Canada and the United States. He was offered $5000 for his whole time, but preferred to receive part of his pay from the Toronto Globe and part from a Boston syndicate. Reciprocity means annexation and annexation the haul'ng down of the flag that graces these walls."

The Journal (Liberal) to-day will say: "This is a strong remark for a member of Parliament to make against a public man and involves what may be established as a malicious libel. What reply will the editor of The Globe make? If it is not a libel the people of Canada are entitled to know by what measure editorial comment is being meted out to them. If it is a libel the members for Victoria and Haliburton has struck a hornet's nest that may cause him some pangs."

KING GEORGE MODEL MONARCH

HIS MAJESTY MAKING STRONG IMPRESSION ON EVERY PERSON.

No Waster of Time—Never Hurries His Judgment—Rarely Changes His Mind.

London, Jan. 22.—King George, who is settling to his work, is making a strong impression on all who come in contact with him. He takes the greatest care to become thoroughly informed on all matters submitted to him. He possesses the ability not to waste his time on details. He never hurries his judgment, to which in the last years of his life, King Edward often referred. "What does George think," was a frequent remark of King Edward. King George is free from affectation. He does not pretend to grasp what he does not understand, but asks pertinent questions until he is satisfied. Once he has decided, it is very difficult to induce him to change his mind. He shows exceptional consideration to all about him. Unlike his father, he likes to be left alone to read. He is a great reader of serious books. He is not so much addicted to fiction. He is very domestic and is fond of early hours. Consequently those in honorary attendance upon him find their work light, whereas his secretaries are kept extremely busy.

His Majesty intends to give a number of dinners to men only at Buckingham Palace in February, a form of hospitality he particularly enjoys. They will be as informal as is compatible with his position for he has a truly great dislike for unnecessary ceremony. King Edward delighted in knee breeches for evening wear. King George generally dispenses with these and allows his friends to arrive dressed as for an ordinary dinner. He is nothing like so particular as was his father as to what he eats. He smokes a great deal, but is almost a teetotaler. A weak whiskey and soda is his general dinner drink. He seldom takes a second glass. On ceremonial occasions he takes a glass of champagne. More rarely he sips after dinner a glass of port, although it is always has it poured out in order not to render any guest uncomfortable who might like to sample the famous Royal wine.

The King and Queen have the Court invitation list and have struck off about 60 names, including those of several individuals whose faces were unfamiliar at Buckingham Palace in King Edward's day, and who were in closest touch with the Royal set.

RUSSIA CALLOUS AS IS HER WONT

RECOGNIZES NO OBLIGATIONS IN BRITISH-FRANCO TREATY.

Not Even Moral Ones—Popular Press Conducting an Open Anti-English Campaign.

London, Jan. 23.—Whatever may be the official utterances of Europe, an opinion is practically unanimous that Russia recognizes no obligations of even a moral nature toward Great Britain or France so far as the commission known as the Triple Entente is concerned. Her treaty alliance with France imposes, of course, certain definite obligations which the Czar is presumably ready to fulfil. The entente with England, however, carries with it no pledges beyond the known agreement regarding Persia.

Russian opinion on the whole situation is frankly callous and cynical. Thus, the Sun's St. Petersburg correspondent writes: "Russia is now undergoing the unique sensation of having the diplomat representation of the two leading democracies of Europe expressing the most cordial friendship for the Czar and the Government, while the nations in whose name they speak are themselves of Russia's present diplomacy. It is showing open suspicions and distrust evident here that the Triple Entente is not in a healthy state. The official organ in St. Petersburg regards the situation without regreti and reflects with satisfaction that Russia has no favors to ask from either of her associates. The popular press is conducting an open anti-English campaign."

BURNED TO DEATH IN THEIR HOME

Albert Lea, Minn., Jan. 23.—N. C. Jensen and three of his children were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their home at Richmond, 11 miles from here, but owing to the heroism of Mrs. Jensen she and the other children escaped.

The fire was discovered an hour after midnight Sunday and Mrs. Jensen carried the three children out one by one. She was unable to get back into the house after the third trip and the others perished in bed. The husband was found in the ruins of the fire later.

With the mercury down to ten below zero, Mrs. Jensen clad only in her night robe, carried her children a mile for refuge.

Ontario Legislature

Formal Opening of New Masonic Temple in Harrisburg.

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 24.—The third session of the twelfth Legislature of Ontario met to-day and was opened with the customary ceremonies. Although the session is not likely to be prolonged for more than six or eight weeks, the indications are that many matters of importance will be brought up for consideration and action. Among the most important legislation to be dealt with is the proposed revision of the liquor license act. Action to report the new measure will provide for the abolition of all license boards and the placing of the control and operation of all licenses in the hands of a central commission, which will sit in Toronto and have jurisdiction of all licenses in the Province.

BUBONIC PLAGUE GETS STRONG HOLD IN MANCHURIA AND OTHER DISTRICTS.

Town of Fudiziadan Has 1,500 Deaths in a Week—Plague Centres Will be Cut Off as a Preventive.

Harbin, Manchuria, Jan. 23.—Fudiziadan, a suburb of Hargin and the particular plague spot of Manchuria, is to be isolated as the first systematic step toward exterminating the plague that has grown more threatening every day.

This was decided upon at a conference participated in by the Taotai, the head of the local Chinese Government, and English and Chinese physicians.

The movement is due to pressure brought by the Russian Government, which realizes the seriousness of the situation.

A Russian physician who has just completed an inspection of Fudiziadan, secured three plague sources in the neighborhood of which 7,000 persons reside. Corpses are piled high in the streets and in the yards adjoining the homes. Last week there were 1,500 deaths in Fudiziadan. The pneumonic type of the plague predominates.

Believed That Cannington Man was Murdered

Cannington, Jan. 24.—Andrew Lowes, a farmer of Derryville, near here, has received a telegram saying that the body of a man, who was apparently strangled to death, found on the Winnipeg flyer at Thief River Falls, Minn., is not that of his son, L. R. Lowes, familiarly known as "Ruddy." The message was from one of Mr. Lowes' relatives who had seen the body.

The fact that tickets and papers made in favor of L. R. Lowes, of Cannington, were found on the body, Cannington being the nearest station to Derryville, caused some excitement here, and naturally it was at first supposed that the body was that of "Ruddy." The latter, who has been located for some time near Regina, spent the Christmas and New Years' Holidays with his people at Derryville, leaving a short time ago for the West.

A post card received while he was on the way, said he was well.

"Ruddy," who is a big and powerful young man, has an uncle and several cousins in Toronto, in which city he was a frequent visitor.

Winnipeg, Jan. 24.—A despatch from the Chief of Police at Thief River Falls says that the body of the deadman is Theodore Hernshought, and that "R. H. Lowes," whose ticket he was using was supposed to have been waylaid by Hernshought at a point between Cannington and Minneapolis. The postmortem shows that Hernshought probably was choked as the result of drinking excessively, and that the marks on his throat were probably made by himself when dying. A wide search is being conducted for Lowes, as it is believed in Thief River Falls that he has been murdered.

BOURASSA ON APPEAL TO ROME

DENOUNCES ALLEGED ATTEMPT OF LEMIEUX TO GET NAVAL POLICY ENDORSED.

Desired Support of Pope—Nationalist Leader Says the Same Crowd Had Hands Out for Annexation Funds.

Montreal, Jan. 24.—Mr. Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader, publishes a striking article under his referring to the special mission of Postmaster-General Lemieux to Rome and the story that was published almost immediately after the latter's return to Canada, that the British authorities and the Laurier Cabinet had approached the Vatican with the object of having the Pope intervene in the naval question in favor of the Laurier Government's policy.

This story, Mr. Bourassa says, incredible as it appears, is true. These steps were taken; they are being pursued at the present time, and it was a Canadian Minister, Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux, from whom the information was obtained by those who published the story.

Mr. Bourassa denounces in scathing terms such an attempt. "It is a fine spectacle," he says, "to see the politicians at bay seeking to enrol the the force of the bishops and curés in their electoral squads to bolster up their Niobes in distress and their empty Rainbows, and above all, to sign own signature, in last night's Devoir, sure to the Ministerial party the conservation of their portfolios, their patronage, their places, etc., in the name of the liberty of the Church, and the preservation of the Empire."

FORMERLY ANNEXATIONISTS.

"And who are these fierce defenders of the throne?" asks Mr. Bourassa. "They are," he adds, "the annexationists of yesterday, and who held their hands behind them in order to receive from an American syndicate the millions destined to pay the expense of a campaign for unrestricted reciprocity, the prelude and screen to the abandonment of our national franchises, and the rights of the Crown to the American Republic."

Mrs. Ernest Hammes, of St. Paul, will receive with her mother, Mrs. Macfarlane Wilson, at 282 London street to-morrow.

MACKENZIE WILL ATTEND WEDDING

MARRIAGE OF COUNT DE LESSEPS TO TORONTO GIRL TO OCCUR TO-DAY.

A Honeymoon in Egypt—Aviator to be Married in St. James' Church London, Eng., This Morning.

London, Jan. 24.—Sir William and Lady Mackenzie, of Toronto, Canada, arrived here to-day on the Lusitania to attend the marriage of their daughter, Miss Grace Mackenzie, to Count Jacques de Lesseps, the French aviator. The ceremony will take place to-morrow morning in St. James' Church, Spanish Place.

The bridesmaids will be Miss Ethel Mackenzie, sister of the bride, and Miss Mabel Magher, a first cousin. Mrs. W. W. Beardmore, another sister of the bride, will also be in attendance. The costumes of the brides maids are a pale pink chiffon, with blue sashes and large pink tulle hats.

After the ceremony Sir William and Mrs. Mackenzie will hold a reception at Claridge Hotel, after which Count De Lesseps and his bride will leave for Egypt on their honeymoon. When they return they will probably reside in Paris.

Count De Lesseps met Miss Mackenzie last fall while he was giving exhibition flights in Toronto. The accompanied him several times in his aeroplane there, and later attended the Belmont park meet in New York. The engagement was announced at the close of that meet.

Very Short and Right to the Point

FRANK MILLER TELLS WHY HE RECOMMENDS DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

He Used Them for Rheumatism, Heart Disease and Lumbago, and They Went Right to the Root of His Trouble.

Elkmouth, B.C., Jan. 24—(Special)—Frank Miller, section foreman on the railroad here, whose work exposes him to all kinds of weather, has discovered that Dodd's Kidney Pills are a sovereign remedy for those Kidney ills that almost invariably follow neglected colds.

"For four years I suffered from Lumbago, Heart Disease and Rheumatism, brought on from a cold," says Mr. Miller. "And I got the very best results from using Dodd's Kidney Pills. I freely recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to anyone suffering from these diseases."

Short and to the point, that statement, isn't it? But it is just like Dodd's Kidney Pills. They go right to the point. They cure the Kidneys Healthy Kidneys strain all the impurities out of the blood. Pure blood means good circulation and renewed life and energy all over the body.

That Dodd's Kidney Pills not only cure disease. They tone up the whole body and make a man feel that he has been given a new lease of life. That's why people all over Canada are shouting the praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

A Brutal Tragedy Enacted at Montreal

MURDERED, THEN BODY WAS BURNED—MRS. JOS. MARTIN THE VICTIM.

The House Was Set Afire—Police Examination of the Room Shows a Struggle Took Place.

Montreal, Jan. 24.—That a brutal tragedy has been enacted and an effort made to hide the crime by setting fire to the house, was the theory of the police this morning when they visited the apartments of Mrs. Jos. Martin, at 18A Jubilee Court, off Visation street, whose body was found burnt and charred almost beyond recognition when Captain Charpentier and his men, in response to an alarm sent in by neighbors, broke into the dead woman's rooms early this morning.

A cursory examination by the firemen showed that the blaze had started in a small hall room outside of the bedroom where the deceased woman slept. The body was found in the kitchen, some fifteen feet away in a lying posture, her arms crossed under her head. At her feet lay the fragments of an exploded lamp, while a cane bottomed rocking chair was upturned near her.

Thick, dark red blotches of blood sticking to the walls and the furniture of several of the rooms of the little flat were found by the police when an examination of the premises were made by daylight to-day. There was every evidence that a fearful struggle had taken place before the house was set on fire and the woman, whether dead or alive, left a prey to the flames.

Blood covered the walls of the little passage way, and two of the rooms. The iron guard around the stove in the kitchen, where the body was found, was covered with it, while the body was found was covered with it, while chairs and tables bore evidence of crime. The body was burned almost to a cinder, and it is doubtful whether the doctors at the morgue, who began a careful examination this morning will be able to discover the real cause of the woman's death. No weapon was found in the house, and so far the police are without a single clue.

According to neighbors, Mrs. Martin was about 36 years of age, and was living alone. She had plenty of friends and callers, however.

Peterboro' Defeated Trenton Last Night

In a game last night which was fast from start to finish, the local intermediates defeated Trenton by a score of 13—6. The half-time score was 7—2. The largest crowd of the season witnessed the battle.

The game was a hummer from the time referee Whitehead started the boys off.

The spectators were kept on their toes all the time and the rafters fairly creaked when a local player got away on one of those scintilating rushes, or when a shot beat out Mr. McGiffin. The Trenton bunch were there too, when any of their pets got away with an end to end run, although when the half-time score stood at 7—2, they resembled a "wet rag," so confident were they of carrying off a victory and cinching the district before the game.

The visitors were a speedy aggregation and were not to be "sneezed at." They were in the game all the time, were fast skaters abd good stick-handlers, but the locals had them faded on the combination end.

The Pets handed out a great big surprise to some of the "wise ones," as well as the Trentonites. The team last night played the game to a man and fairly set the fans "bug." Glover, at point, played a magnificent defence game, stopping rush after rush, while Dennison at cover, fairly burnt up the ice and kept the wing men well and splendidly fed. Every man was there with the goods and delivered them right at the door—they did not wait to knock.

The play started out with end to end rushes and in a few minutes the Pets banged one past McGiffin. Shortly after Parke repeated the trick, making two for the Pets.

While Parke and Kelly were serving time in the box Trenton scored twice, making the tally two all.

Dennison made a fine end to end rush and scored. Sorel was hurt and took a Trenton man with him. Dennison made another rush and scored then Ray and Parke each tallied one. Peterboro 7, Trenton 2.

Kelly received a penalty just before half-time and there was no more scoring done until the gong sounded.

—Second Half—

Kelly had to finish his time and when he got back, Glover took a rest. Kelly made a fine rush and scored after which Glover came back and Ray shortly watched from the side. Kelly again scored and when Ray returned to the proceedings Parke scored again. Dennison made a nice rush and on a fine pass Parke scored another. Trenton's captain now watched from the reserved seat. Parke was hurt and took a man off, and in his absence Glover scored. Park was in the game shortly and about this time Trenton began to find the net. Four times the rubber passed Derocher for counters and then Glover went off again. There was some fast rushing, first one team and then the other. The ice was so slushy that the players often skated over the rubber. On a nice combination rush by Dennison and Ray, the latter scored on a neat pass. This ended the scoring for the night and the gong sounded for the finish—Pets 13, Trenton 6.

The following is the line-ups:

—Trenton—
Goal—McGiffin.
Point—Croft.
Cover—McGaw.
Rover—Cumings.
Centre—Fletcher.
R. Wing—Powers.
L. Wing—Art. Armstrong.

—Peterboro—
Goal—Derocher.
Point—Glover.
C. Point—Dennison.
Rover—Ray.
Centre—Parks.
R. Wing—Sorel.
L. Wing—Kelly.

Some are asking, what happened to the Trenton team?

They were beaten by a faster team, is all there is about it.

Derocher in goal, played a star game, stopping a good many hot ones. McGiffin was pretty good, but was beaten by a good many from close in.

Could Glover come back? Well, yes, he was right there to the finish and by a timely rush scored a goal.

Dennison was in the game all the time, relieving the forwards by many nice rushes, as was also Ray and Kelly. Parke at centre played a grand game. He is a superb skater, and stick-handler, and won applause by his many rushes and good back-checking.

Sorel did not play very long, but was doing good work until he got hurt.

The Trentons were fast skaters and started many nice rushes, but were blocked by Glover and Dennison who were on the job all the time.

If Cobourg wins from Trenton now, Peterboro will have won the district. If Cobourg should loose, Trenton and the locals will be tie for the district.

FASHIONS IN CRIME.

"Miser murdered for his gold" was a favorable newspaper heading for the Wellesley crime. The victim had a store of the yellow metal. He loved it, he was proud of it, and the pride which tempted him to show it aroused the sordid envy and greed of the murderer. There is something archaic in the incident. In olden times a large proportion of wealth was in the form of jewels and precious metals. The owner gloated over them, and sought to carry out his desire by fraud or force.

To-day a very small proportion of the wealth of nations and individuals is in the visible and glittering form. The felon who tries to steal in this way gets little for his pains and danger. The aggregate of loss in property from the deeds of those who fill our prisons and penitentiaries is small. The evil is not so much the lots of money as the violence involved in burglary and highway robbery. The victim is not usually a wealthy man. The wealth of a millionaire or a multi-millionaire consists in stocks and bonds and shares. He makes his payments by cheque. If he is knocked down and robbed on a dark night, the robber will probably get a dollar or two carried for small expenses. If the millionaire's house is broken into, the burglar may, with infinite risk and pains, obtain some plate and jewelry, which he can dispose of at only a small part of its value, and with fresh risk of detection. The victim is most commonly the ignorant miser whose little hord becomes the talk of the countryside, or the simpleton who shows off a roll of bills in a barroom.

The modernized robber recognizes the change in conditions and lays his plans accordingly. He wrecks banks. He gets up fraudulent companies. He freezes small shareholders out of bona-fide companies. He cooks accounts. He abuses positions of trust. He lays his hands on public moneys and public resources. He obtains valuable franchises on pretence of giving public service, and withholds the service. As a rule his course is free from physical violence, from physical danger to himself or his victim. But the victim may be ruined.

Suffragettes Will Carry Out Bold Plan if Franchise is Not Granted Them.

London, Jan. 21.—Considerable uneasiness existed in officials circles here today over a threat made by Mrs. Pankhurst, leader of the English suffragettes, in a speech made in Paris, when she threatened trouble during the coronation ceremonies here if Parliament failed to come to time on the Womans Suffrage Bill.

Many conjectures were made as to what Mrs. Pankhurst meant by her threat. It is generally believed that the Suffragettes intend having a monster parade of women on the day of the coronation pageant if the Women's Suffrage Bill is not passed.

[illegible] distance and doubtless they had not scrupled to inflict on those who had done them no wrong. They were tied to a tree-trunk in the heart of a clump, and a hundred men might pass in that lonely place without discovering them, whereas Hossein Beg and his subordinate could see easily enough through the leafy screen that enveloped their open air prison.

[illegible] hour later, Hossein [illegible] arrived on the open space [illegible] the village ghat. At one [illegible] at the other a long [illegible] centre, at a little distance [illegible] square modern [illegible] warehouse [illegible] the shelled gables were peak.

[illegible] the ekka came a risaldar, [illegible] one horse and [illegible] when he dismounted [illegible] followed at his heels [illegible] now had the pistols [illegible] behind the [illegible] drawn curtains of the vehicle.

"Mohammed Rasul!" shouted the risaldar, loudly. "Where is Mohammed Rasul? I must discourse with him instantly."

A man came running.

"Ohe, sirdar," he cried. "Behold, I come!"

A note was thrust into the runner's hands.

"Read, and quickly," was the imperious order. "I have affairs at Fattehpore and cannot wait here long. Is there a boat to be hired?"

"A budgerow is even now approaching, leader of the faithful."

"Good. There is some disposition to be made of two Feringhi women. Read that which Hossein Beg hath written, and make haste, I pray thee, brother."

Perhaps Mohammed Rasul would not have wondered why his employer wrote in such imploring strain that he was to obey [illegible] worshipful "Ali Khan's" slightest word, and bestow him and his belongings, together with the two prisoners on board a boat for Fattehpore with the utmost speed. However that may be, he lost no time. The budgerow was warped close to the ghat, her contents, mostly European furniture, as Malcolm could see through a fold in the curtain, were promptly unloaded and preparations made for the return journey. First the horses were led on board and secured. Then two pallid girls, only half clothed, their eyes red with weeping and their cheeks haggard with misery, were led from the go-down.

"Ali Khan" was about to guide the ekka along the rough gangway when Mohammed Rasul interfered.

"My master says naught concerning the ekka and pony," said he. "He hath detained Copi, and this driver is unknown to me. Who will bring them back when they have served your needs, sirdar?"

"I will attend to that," replied Chumru, gruffly, and Hossein Beg's factotum had perforce to be content with the undertaking.

But fate, which had certainly favored Malcolm and his native comrade thus far, played them what looked like a jade's trick at the very moment when success was within their grasp. The ekka pony, frightened by the lap of the swift-flowing water against the steps beneath, shied, backed, and strove to reach the shore. Not all Chumru's wiry strength, aided by the alarmed ryot, could prevent the brute from turning. A wheel slipped off the staging, the narrow vehicle toppled over, and the amazed spectators saw a booted and spurred British officer of cavalry sprawling on the ghat instead of the veiled Mohammedan woman who ought to have made her appearance in this undignified manner.

Malcolm was on his feet in a second. "Come on, Chumru!" he cried, as he leaped on board the budgerow. He saw one of the crew take an extra turn of a rope round a cat-head, and fired at him. Hit or miss, the fellow tumbled overboard, and his mates followed. Chumru, assisted by the ryot, who elected at this twelfth hour to throw in his lot with that of the sahib, began to cast off the cables. Even the two dazed girls helped, once they knew that an Englishman was fighting in their behalf.

To add to the excitement on shore, Malcolm fired the second pistol at the man nearest the boat, which was already beginning to slip away with the current. Then he rushed to the helm, unlashed it, and turned the boat's head toward the channel, while Chumru and the ryot, helped by the girls, hauled at the heavy mat sail.

Having lashed the helm again in order to keep the budgerow on the starboard tack, Malcolm was about to lend a hand, despite his wound, when a spurt of firing from the bank took him by surprise, because he had seen neither gun nor pistol in the hands of the loungers on the ghat, and the [illegible] were certainly unarmed.

Glancing back he saw a man [illegible] he had last seen in the moulvie's company at Ital Bareilly gesticulating fiercely as he directed the target practice of a number of men. A group of lathered horses behind these showed that they had ridden far and fast, so the accident, which nearly led to his undoing, had really helped to save him and his companions, else the fusillade to which they were now subjected must have taken place while the boat was still tied to the wharf.

"Lie flat on the deck," he shouted in English, and repeated the words in Hindustani. He flung himself down by Chumru's side.

"Haul away!" he gasped. "We will soon be out of range."

Thus while the cumbrous sail creaked and groaned as it slowly climbed the mast, and bullets cut through the matting or were imbedded in the stout woodwork, the latest argosy of Malcolm's fortunes thrust herself with ever-increasing speed into the ample breast of Mother Ganga. Soon the firing ceased. Malcolm raised his head. The excited mob on the shore was already a horde of Lilliputians, and the placid swish of the river around the roomy craft told him that he was actually free, and on the way to Allahabad once more.

CHAPTER XII

The Swing of the Pendulum

Malcolm's first measured thought was an unpleasant one. It was his intent to land one of the budgerow's crew at the earliest opportunity with a written message, which the bearer would probably be unable to read, addressed to Mohammed Rasul, bidding him go to the assistance of the unlucky Hossein Beg. That plan was

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY FOR SAFE INVESTMENT.

In a Company With Officers and Directors Who Will Look After the Interests of the Stockholders—No Chance of Losing a Dollar When it is Invested in This Company.

In another column of this issue is a splendid offer to Canadian investors from the Los Angeles Midway Oil Co., of Los Angeles, Cal. Investors can buy any number of shares in this company at $1.00 per share, with a chance of making upwards of 100 per cent. on their money. There is no kind of business conducted today that a person has the showing for money invested that he has by investing in a new oil company, having property situated as this one has. Less than four per cent. of the wells drilled are dry and non-productive, thus there is only 4-100 of a chance to lose, which is nearly nothing.

The officers and directors are all reliable business men who will look after the interest of the stockholders. The stock of the Lakeview Oil Company had hard sledding at 25 cents per share, but after the gusher came in was quoted at from $15 to $20 per share. This company may strike a gusher any time.

Why not take some of this stock and not wait until it has a flowing well, then say, like many others, that you should have bought this stock when you could have got it on the ground floor, or afterwards buy it at an advanced price.

Now is the time to purchase before the block is disposed of and the price advanced.

Mr. Alf. Hodgson, purchasing agent of the Wheeling Mould and Foundry Co., Wheeling, W. Va., is spending a few weeks vacation with his mother, 208 Rubidge street.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

CRANIUMS OF THE GREAT

Prominent Men Have Heads Shaped According to the Profession They Pursue

One of the most entertaining features of the coming Universal Races Congress in London will be a collection of portraits of the highest types of mankind produced by various countries. These will include Cabinet Ministers, heads of universities, scientific celebrities, and probably, great writers and musicians.

"Our idea," said Mr. Gustav Spiller, the organizer, "is to show that the prominent or great men of all countries have heads that are very similar in essential features. A man of one country who has forced himself into prominence in any sphere of life, is bound to resemble men of other countries who are in similar positions. This should be shown clearly by the portraits, and they should also show that politics produces one universal type, science another, music another, and so on. Recognition of this should tend to universal understanding and friendship.

FINE BIRDS IN OLD LONDON

Beautiful Feathered Creatures From All Over the World on Show

The king among the more than 2,000 birds on view at the London Cage Bird Association's annual show at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster, is a handsome specimen of the greater bird of Paradise in full plumage. It belongs to Mr. R. Pauwels, a famous Belgian amateur collector, and is worth $7,500.

Mr. Pauwels has brought the bird to England in company with other valuable rarities especially for the present show. His exhibits include a black-capped lory, a Cuban woodpecker, a pair of white mynahs, and a pair of sky-blue budgerigars, most of which are new birds to the English show bench. The greater bird of Paradise dominates them all, however, and it is probable that no other specimen of its breed will be seen for many years at an exhibition in this country owing to the decree which came into force on July 1 last prohibiting the export of birds of Paradise from Dutch Guinea, the home of the species, except for scientific purposes.

THAT USELESS HYPHEN

Someone with Love for Figures Proves It is Criminal Waste

Although the general tendency is to do away with unnecessary marks of punctuation, the hyphen is still retained in "to-day," "to-night," and "to-morrow." That the retaining of the hyphen in these words is not only useless but absolutely criminal is easily demonstrated by a bit of simple mathematics.

There are 178,236,592 English-speaking people. The words "to-day," "to-night," and "to-morrow" are together used forty-eight times daily by every person—five of these being written out in long hand. Thus the daily output of hyphens in these words totals 891,182,960. Taking the average of a written hyphen to be one quarter of an inch, you have a straight line 3,994 miles long. At the usual rate of writing it would take one man seventy-six years to insert the hyphens in these words, and his salary would amount to about £20,000.

But, avoiding all theory, "to-day," "to-night," and "to-morrow" are daily hyphenated four times each on 234,192 typewriters, and three times daily on 184,312 linotype machines. Remembering that a pressure of 1 ounce is required to strike a typewriter key, and 2½ ounces to depress a linotype, we see that in writing these hyphens a total of 361,974 foot-pounds of energy is expended, or enough to draw a passenger train half-a-dozen times from London to Edinburgh and back.

To avoid appearing too critical, no mention has been made of the waste of ink and paper, but this would approximate in value the daily bread supply of London, Manchester, and Glasgow.

ENTHUSIASM WON

Temperance Veteran Journeyed 5,000 Miles in Thirteen Months

Enthusiasm in a cause one has at heart overcomes many obstacles which would be otherwise insurmountable. For instance, Mr. John Abbey, the well-known temperance veteran, spent over forty years in England, where he rendered yeoman service in the Eastern Counties, and then proceeded to South Africa to help on the cause over there. Mr. Abbey has journey no fewer than 5,000 miles during the last thirteen months. In addition, he has delivered 200 addresses and taken 16,000 pledges in the colleges and schools, from both teachers and scholars.

A PARABLE

Two spiders who dwelt in different parts of a church chanced to meet together in the aisle one day when out for a constitutional.

"How are you getting on?" said spider No. 1 to spider No. 2.

"Oh, moderately," was the reply. "I don't feel very comfortable on Sundays. I live in the pulpit, under the cushion, and on that day the parson comes and bangs the book and sends his fists on the side, and I have to keep very close, or else some day I think he'll hit me. He bangs with such force that I know he'll squash me to a jelly."

"Oh, you come and live with me," said his companion. "I'm never troubled; I am always comfortable, and never disturbed from one year's end to the other."

"Indeed!" said the other spider. "And where do you live?"

"Oh, I live in the poor-box," was the reply.

TREASON IN INDIA

Sentences on Eleven Bengalese Pleaders at Calcutta

The special tribunal of the High Court at Calcutta has sentenced eleven Bengalese of the better class who were concerned in the Khulna conspiracy to terms of transportation, varying from seven to three years. The charge on which they were tried was one of conspiracy to wage war on the King-Emperor. In sentencing up for the prosecution, the Advocate-General of Bengal stated that the evidence proved the existence of a secret society, or combination of individuals, with the common purpose of overthrowing the British Government in India. Their operations were not confined to the city of Calcutta, but extended to the villages of Pathpara, Dulgram, Sholpur Agra, and other places in the districts of Khulna and Jessore. The transported men are all persons with some education, and superior in position to the masses of the people.

When these Bengalese were arrested a large quantity of seditious literature was found at their houses. Several documents dealt with the preparation of bombs, and contained hints about explosives which it was dangerous to manufacture. All the evidence pointed to their being engaged in an extensive conspiracy to overthrow British rule in India.

WRITES OF HABITANTS

What a Correspondent Says of French Canadians

R. E. Verande, writing to The Daily Chronicle from Montreal, says in part:

The "Habitants" probably are the most prolific people in the world. Years ago the Government had to drop the free grants to families consisting of twelve or more children, for the simple, but amazing, reason that the grants were taken up by thousands and thousands. The withdrawal of the bounty has not, it seems, affected the increase of population, and the next census is likely to see the ratio maintained. No other people can compete with them if this continues—except by immigration; and a Scotch Canadian assured me recently that the "habitants" hate to see the emigrant ships arrive at Quebec, because it means peopling from outside of land that they of themselves could in due course people from within.

WARY AND WATCHFUL

"Found, on 13th inst., in High Street, a gentleman's gold watch. Owner can have same by paying expenses of advertising on application to Alex McGillies, 17, Catchem Close." So ran the advertisement. Presently Mr. Thomson was ushered in.

"Vell," said Alexander, "vat can I do for you?"

"I—I have called," said Mr. Thomson, "with respect to my watch."

"Ah! you haf, eh? Vell, here was der watch, and dere vas two pounds to pay for advertisements."

ROUGH ON BELINDA

A little singing was being indulged in at a social gathering and, half-way down the programme, the name of Miss Belinda Brown figured.

Alas! when the time came for her to appear a messenger arrived to say that the lady was suffering from a very bad cold, and, therefore, the chairman had to excuse her to the audience.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "I have to announce that Miss Brown will be unable to sing as announced, and therefore, Mr. Green will give us 'A Song of Thanksgiving.'"

DOGS AND MUZZLES

In Nine Months Many Canines Went to a Premature Grave

The canines, fancy and common, in western Ontario will bark their greetings in honor of the opening of the Legislature, for since the session closed have they not obtained their freedom? It may be, however, that the period of mourning is not yet over, for in the nine months when muzzles held the dogs captive, 1,124 dogs were killed in the various police death-chambers. In Toronto alone the number of people summoned to court for not having the necessary hear gear for their dogs was 1,563. The fine in most cases was $3 without costs.

CLOVER IS KING

Napoleon Carron brought to the Chatham market a load of clover seed which weighed up to 5,220 lbs., making 60 and a fraction bushels. He was paid $7 a bushel for the seed, and the cheque which he received for the whole load was made out for $430.60.

NO REFLECTION

"Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles," said Mr. Meekins.

"Well," answered his wife, "it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor."

"GIVE YOUR SON A DEED"

If, by way of illustration, you will review the history of the men in your town who have made money out of real estate, you will find that in each and every instance their profits were made from real estate acquired at ground floor prices.

More money can be made by those who acquire a realty interest in a town at its inception per dollar invested than from investments made after a period of years.

Do you know that you can purchase with $5 cash a full sized residential lot in Bow City, Alberta

the logical location for a great city, a city which is destined to be known, the world over, as a market place annually for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain, grown on the vast irrigated fields surrounding Bow City, a shipping point for coal from the great Bow Centre Collieries, and a purchasing depot for hundreds of prosperous farmers resident throughout Southern Alberta.

To-day is your opportunity to acquire an interest in Bow City at the ground floor price.

It will be too late six months hence, to apply for a lot in Bow City at the present prices and on such easy terms as are offered you in this advertisement.

Why not follow Russell Sage's advice given in a letter published some years ago to the fathers in the Western States:—

"Buy your son a lot in a town being the "centre of a great agricultural country—when "he comes of age that lot will be worth consid-"erable money and will provide a handsome "stake for him in life; it is at least most sub-"stantial life insurance—sure and certain."

Buy your son a $50 lot in Bow City, the coming metropolis of the western prairies. In a very short time he can re-sell the same at a big increase, which money he will find advantageous in business pursuits or in a college course.

Bow City, the centre of the great granary of Southern Albert has a future concerning which no sane business man or banker has any doubt.

When you are assured of the success of the city, when you have proven to you beyond the shadow of a doubt that Bow City will, in the very near future, be one of the most active, one of the most progressive towns on the Western prairies, you should not hesitate to acquire at least one $50 residential lot, when same is on sale on such easy terms as 10 per cent cash and the balance 10 per cent per month until paid—a deed at any time.

Bow City is in the heart of a famous irrigated farming belt whose farmers are assured of a crop every year. They are prosperous and their prosperity will naturally enhance the value of Bow City real estate.

The great coal mines of Bow City will furnish work for 1,000 to 1,500 miners daily, these miners will constitute a substantial basis for a successful city.

The present owners of Bow City have decided that no licenses shall be issued for the sale of spirituous liquors; they intend that this great mining and agricultural centre shall be free from any traffic in intoxicating drinks—it will be a clean city.

Bow City is the headquarters of a railway which taps a territory unparalleled for richness in crops and natural resources.

The Sale of Bow City lots opened but a few days ago

If you are desirous of acquiring a $50 residential lot close in you should lose no time in making application by wire direct to the General Agents of the townsite, or to the nearest sub-agent.

Do not delay by sending your application by mail.

Wire at once your reservation for one or more lots. On receipt of wire your name will be placed on the closest-in unsold lot or lots and same will be held in your name, allowing you sufficient time for your cash payment, mailed same day you wire, to travel from your home to the head office.

You may find it to your advantage, if you are desirous of securing a business opening, or a business lot, to write for copy of the plans, booklets and descriptive matter concerning Bow City, all of which may be had on application, free of charge.

BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS

Much Interest Will be Associated with Legislation on the Subject

While several subjects of importance will keep public attention directed to the Legislative buildings during the session, legislation on the bi-lingual question will probably be followed with more than ordinary interest though it may not be in the time light for some weeks after the opening.

Following a keen controversy on the subject, particularly as it related to the schools in the French section of Essex and Kent, the Government appointed F. W. Merchant, M.A., to visit the English-French schools, public and separate, in those counties, and find out if there was any departure from the Public and Separate Schools Act or from any of the departmental regulations and circulars, and if so, to what extent. Part of his instructions read as follows: "As the school law is intended to provide all pupils with a thorough training in English, it is desirable that you ascertain whether and if so to what extent, the means to attain this end are adequate or defective."

It is thought that Mr. Merchant's report will not be ready before February is well advanced. In the mean time, however, reports have been made to the Government showing that some of the French-English schools in the eastern part of the Province have not been complying to the letter with the School Act.

LICENSING DOCTORS

It is reported that one of the chief clauses of Toronto University's proposed bill would enable the University to license doctors, a power that is now limited to the Medical Council.

ALGONQUIN PARK

A Large Amount of Money Will be Necessary to Pay the Licensees for Their Privileges

The financial statement of the Treasurer, Hon. A. J. Matheson, will have to provide, among other things, for the payment of timbered lands held by licensees in Algonquin Park. So rapidly was this great national forest being depleted that the Government yielded to the public clamor that the great area be rescued from the spoliation of the woodman's axe. "Spare that tree" was the slogan which passed from mouth to mouth, and from housetop to housetop, until the cry was heeded and the trees spared. The necessary money will probably be a portion of another loan.

NIAGARA POWER

The Hydro-Electric System has Made Substantial Progress During the Recess

The Hydro-Electric Commission will be able to report to the Legislature distinct progress during the past year. Niagara power is now used in Berlin, Waterloo, and other places, the transmission line being also practically completed to Toronto. If the Government decides to extend the southern line from St. Thomas to Windsor, a loan of about a million dollars will probably be arranged. The bonds of this issue will be guaranteed by the municipalities. The Hydro-Electric Commission is studying the situation in the eastern part of the province, particularly along the Trent Valley, with a view to hydro-electric development for the benefit of towns and cities in that district.

"THE KLONDYKE'S MOTHER LODE"

The storehouse from which the famous placer creeks, Bonanza and Eldorado, receive their fabulous wealth, have been uncovered on the claims of The Victoria Gulch Mines, situated on the ridge at the head of Victoria and Gay gulches. The company's holdings consist of four quartz claims and about 200 acres 14 miles from Dawson, on a good wagon road and two miles from the Klondyke Mines R.M. There are two true quartz veins, between perfect walls 6 and 10 feet wide on the property, the free milling ore from which is literally encrusted with the yellow metal. Read what some of the world's greatest authorities say:

R. G. McConnell, B.A., of the Geological Survey, says in his report on the Klondyke Goldfields.

"A sample in which no free gold could be detected with the naked eye, or an ordinary magnifying glass, was assayed in the laboratory of the survey and gave 2,625 oz. of gold and 3,267 oz. of silver to the ton."

Pro. Henry A. Maire, D. Sc. F.R.S., Wayneto, Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, in collaboration with Professor A. P. Coleman in a report to the Minister of the Interior, says: "At the head of Victoria Gulch which runs into Bonanza, a creek opposite Gay Gulch, a tributary of Eldorado, and at a height of about 2,300 feet above Dawson, has been opened, what appears to be a true quartz vein, showing nuggety gold in abundance. The gold is distinctly crystalline in character, and the crystals are of a peculiar form having a triangular outline due to the fact that they are octahedra, and in particular a remarkable variety known as "spinel twins." Now it is significant that the gold found in Victoria gulch is also crystalline and has the same characteristic outline, here then we have fairly convincing evidence that the gold found in a stream gravel is identical with that found in situ in a quartz at the head of the valley and in this instance there can be little doubt as to the origin of the gold."

Dr. Eugene Haanel, Director of Mines, a noted authority on mineralogy in a report to the department in 1902, says: "Masses of quartz were seen protruding from the surface all about the locality, and it needed only to wet the surface of the quartz with water to reveal the bright specks of gold adhering to their surface.

"Gay gulch and Victoria gulch, the former a tributary of Eldorado creek, the latter of Bonanza creeks, limit Victoria Hill toward the sources of Bonanza and Eldorado creeks. Above Victoria and Gay gulches, Bonanza and Eldorado creeks respectively are unproductive, below these gulches the creeks are rich. It seems a reasonable conclusion that the gold in these creeks, at least as far as they flank the side of Victoria Hill, was derived from Victoria Hill."

Mr. R. W. Brock, Director Geological Survey, says: "The district is not glaciated. Gold in the recent gravel freshly derived from its original source is similar to gold in the corresponding White Channel gravel. Many of the gold grains and most of the nuggets, enclose quartz. Quartz pebbles are found containing gold, some at least very rich in gold. The quartz of the boulders is similar to the quartz of the veins, and gold of the veins to gold of the gravels. From the foregoing and other facts, it is obvious that the gold is absolutely local in origin, derived from the basins of the pay gulches and creeks."

Fred. T. Congdon, Member for the Yukon, stated on the floor of the House of Commons last January that some of the richest gold quartz in the world was being mined close to Dawson.

Just stop and think of the immense possibilities of rich returns from the development of the claims of The Victoria Gulch mines, when two miles of the Mother Lode runs through the property from which the $55,000,000 in placer gold has been already won from Eldorado and Bonanza creeks, the one-third the Klondyke's entire output: 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the par value of $1 is now offered for public subscription at 25 cents per share fully paid and non-assessable.

No further issue of treasury stock will have to be made at this price.

A CONSUMPTIVE'S DESPAIR

A Wife's Terrible Struggle to Save Husband's Life

Short but tragic was the story told by a feeble, nervous, elderly woman to a London, England, coroner, describing how she struggled with her husband to prevent him taking his life. Deceased was Henry Archibald Death, a gas-fitter, and his widow said that he had only been kept alive during the past twelve months through having two silver tubes inserted in his throat. He was a consumptive. He also had epileptic fits, and one of these occurred when she was alone with him. Suddenly he attempted to pull the tubes from his throat, but she caught his hands and they struggled together for some time until she was finally overpowered. Deceased then pulled out the tubes, and, being unable to breathe, very soon died. Dr. Frederick Ellis corroborated the woman's statement as to the cause of her husband's death, and the jury found that deceased committed suicide whilst in a fit.

TIPS OR NO TIPS

To the Traveller the Practice of Tipping Seems to be Necessary

The traveller's thoughts naturally turn to tipping. The old controversy for and against tips has again been revived, and the old pieces of advice given. At hotels, tip on the scale of 5 per cent. of your bill, after Baedeker, or 10 per cent., as most other people say. Tip everybody you can find. Tip only those who have put themselves out specially for your benefit. Tip nobody at all, and wait to see what happens. Entrust the tips in a lump sum to the hotelkeeper, or give it all to the head waiter, hoping it will be fairly distributed. Every different course is once more advised. The only idea that is dying out, if it ever existed is that of not tipping at all. A German hotelkeeper is said to have tried to abolish tips by paying his servants double wages. The result was that he could get no servants, and sometimes got abuse from his customers.

A French landlord examined on the topic, was cheerfully sceptical, and said he certainly was not going to try his German colleague's experiment. He took the detached view that "hotel servants are the servants not of the hotel proprietor but of the hotel customers. Therefore, why should not the latter, when well served, reward their servants?" In fact, he refused to interfere between customers and servants. The latter are not his servants at all. He is merely a spectator in the game, and looks on while the scrimmage is played between tipper and tipped. "The hotelkeeper is no judge in the matter of tips. The customer alone is competent to judge."

PROVING HIM

Here is a quaint little Turkish fable:—

As a woman was strolling along a road a man started to follow her.

"Why," said she, "do you follow me?"

"Because," he replied, "I have fallen in love with you."

"My sister," said she, "who is coming after me is much handsomer than I. Go and make love to her."

The man turned back and saw a woman with an ugly face, and, being greatly displeased, returned and said:

"Why did you tell me a falsehood?"

The woman replied:

"To discover if you were telling me the truth. If you were in love with me why did you go back for another woman?"

A COW AS A SUSPECT

The Paris Journal publishes an amusing story of an incident occurring outside Marans, a fort near Trente, Austria. A cow strayed from its pasturage and came within reach of the fort. The officer in command suspected the presence of an automatic photographic apparatus, and had the beast seized and closely examined, and when he found nothing to justify his suspicions he turned the animal loose again under the observation of two of his men charged with the duty of following the suspect home to ascertain whether her owner was an Italian spy.

THE FALL OF A BOOKWORM

How a love for Hall Caine's works proved the downfall of George Livermore, thirty-four, an insurance agent, was told on Saturday at the Guildhall, when he was charged with stealing from Smith's bookstall at Liverpool Street station, four books by that writer. The prisoner, who was caught red-handed, said he could not tell what made him take the books. He was particularly fond of this author's works, and was quite unaware that he took four books. He was sent to prison for seven days.

SANDY AND THE BOATS

"Waal," drawled the Yankee, "I guess we've got boats which can beat your British boats hollow. Why, if war broke out between us and Great Britain our fleet would tow the whole British fleet into New York harbor before they knew where they were!"

"Ay," replied Sandy, "ye micht do that; but it would take a much better man than Columbus to discover America after it!"

NORAH'S OBJECTION

Alfred (rapturously): "Now, darling, please name the happy day."

Minnie (blushing): "Three weeks from next Thursday, Alfred."

Norah, the domestic (through the keyhole): "If you please, miss, that's my regular day out. You'll have to get married in the early part of the week."

PAT'S RETORT

A warship called at a military port on the coast of Ireland. Tommy Atkins, meeting a full-bearded Irish tar in the street a little later, said:

"Pat, when are you going to place your whiskers on the Reserve List?"

"When you place your tongue on the Civil List," was the Irish sailor's reply.

BACON SHORTAGE

A Big Decline in the World's "Pig Population"

The bacon shortage, of which the first signs appeared at the beginning of 1909, has now reached such a pitch that one of the best authorities states that "the home industry is in danger of being destroyed," says the London Daily Mail.

The "pig population" of the world, for some reason, has suddenly decreased. The shortage began in the United States, which has contained, it is calculated, about half the hogs in the world. They now number over 54,000,000, as compared with 4,000,000 in the United Kingdom. The chief cause of the shortage is the decrease of the export from the United States, where the "pig population" has decreased by more than a million; and the export is further decreasing owing to increased consumption in the States.

The price of bacon, it is argued by some of the best of authorities, may rise as high as $18 a cwt. wholesale. A few years ago it was $12. It rose at the end of last year to $16 for the best Danish, which fetched the highest price, higher even than Irish. This expensiveness of bacon has very greatly reduced the consumption; but there is an unlimited market for moderately cheap bacon, and Mr. Loudon Douglas, who is one of the leading authorities on the industry, considers that there never was a better opportunity for the English farmer.

We spend, roughly, $100,000,000 each year for pig products from abroad, and yet in Great Britain the pigs decreased in 1909 by nearly 15 per cent. as compared with 1908, and reached the very small number of 2,380,000.

There is great activity in several foreign countries to fill the English market. The Chinese, among others, are making arrangements to send here cured hams and bacon. But the home market is being more and more neglected by English farmers and what was the standard food of the poorer class is now at an almost prohibitive price and threatens to rise further.

FIVE GENERATIONS

Great - Great - Grandmother Recovers Sight after 30 Years' Blindness

With a family of five generations alive and well, Mrs. Potter, of the village of Thundersley in Essex, England, is a proud old lady. She is in her ninety-eighth year, and still hale and hearty, but the most remarkable thing about her is that for thirty years she was totally blind, and at the end of that time her sight was restored. That was about thirteen months ago, and now she is able to see as well as ever. Her blindness followed on a severe attack of influenza and bronchitis. When asked how she recovered her sight, or by what treatment she benefited, she will say that no doctor and no treatment cured her, it was done simply by prayer. She remembered the New Testament stories of the power of faith, so she tried the same method, and found it successful.

Next in the family line comes Mrs. Wheel, her daughter, who is seventy four years of age, a sturdy, splendid looking woman, who seems effectually to have defied the ravages of time, for she is capable of a hard day's work still, and indeed looks as if she could do as much as a man. She has had fourteen children, of whom six are still living.

Her eldest daughter is Mrs. Finch, who is fifty-four years of age, and the youngest mother in the line is Mrs. Gosling, aged thirty-four, and the youngest representative of the family, shown in the photograph, is her son, aged eleven years.

The elder members of this remarkable family live in and near the village of Thundersley, in Essex, in the direction of Southend, which must be one of the most remarkably healthy spots in England. Mrs. Wheel's husband is still living there. He has lived in the same house for eighty seven years!

Passing through the village one cannot help being struck with the number of old people, and, further, with their remarkably healthy and hearty appearance. Thundersley is evidently the place where old age pensioners thrive. Mr. and Mrs. Wheel and her sister are all in receipt of old age pensions.

BOUND BABY'S ARMS

Court Orders Imprisonment for an Inhuman Father

One month's hard labor was the sentence passed at Bolton, England, on John Anthony Johnson, a young laborer, of Hensor Street, for cruelty towards his child. Mrs. Johnson said that before the child was born her husband ill-treated her.

"On one occasion did the baby in bed put its hand on its father's face?" asked the prosecuting solicitor.

"Yes, sir," replied Mrs. Johnson.

"And what did he do?"

"He got some string and tied its arms down to its body so that it could not move them."

"Liar!" exclaimed Johnson.

"Did you undo the string from the child's arms?"

"Yes."

"And what did he do then?"

"He thrashed me."

It was stated that the child only weighed six pounds, while the average weight of one of its age was eleven pounds, eight ounces. Mrs. Johnson was granted a separation order, carrying six shillings per week.

A LUCKY FISHERMAN

Whilst trolling in the bay at St. John's, N.B., C. I. White hooked and landed a maskinonge, which when weighed, tipped the scales at 35½ pounds. It was a fine specimen of this gamey fish.

TWO MEANINGS

"Did your father leave your mother much?" asked the man with intentions of the little boy in black.

"Twice a week," was the unexpected answer.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise oearning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr, Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

Organic Marriages Were Invented by German Royalties

Berlin, Jan. 24.—At the present time there are even Queens whose paternal grandmothers were morganatic wives. The one is the Queen of England, the other the Queen of Spain. The Queen of England's grandmother was a noble Hungarian lady. She was married in 1835 morganatically to Duke Alexander of Wurtemberg, and died six years later, leaving behind her a little boy of four, the late Duke of Teck. He got his title from some ruins in Wurtemberg.

The Queen of Spain's grandmother died fifteen years ago. Her husband was the late Prince Alexander of Hesse. Hessian royalties have been much adicted to morganatic marriages. Likewise princes of the house of Alexander.

MAY BE TROUBLE HERE.

The heir to the throne of the Emperor of Austria, his nephew, the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, who paid a flying visit to London for the funeral of King Edward, has a morganatic wife, who is now known as the Duchess of Hohenberg. She has two sons—children of eight and six years—who, however, are barred from their father's rank of honor. There are people who say that this marriage may lead to trouble some of these fine days—meaning hereby that the Archduke, with the natural partiality of a father, may take it into his head to attempt to make one of these sons his full and legitimate heir. Perhaps so, perhaps not. The expected rately comes to pass. There was once, long ago, a German prince, the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, who fell so much in love with his beautiful morganatic wife that he very badly wanted to make her his full wife, and her son, the heir to the Dukedom. But the other German princes would have none of it, and he was not able to carry out his intentions.

Morganatic marriages were invented by German royalties, but they have been copied in almost every other country in Europe. There is at the present moment living in Paris a lady who rejoices in the euphonious name of Princess Youriewsky. She is of the princely Russian family of Dolgorouki, and is the morganatic widow of the Tsar Alexander II. Her three children were born at St. Petersburg in 1872, 1873 and 1878 respectively, but the Tsar did not marry her until July 1880, only eight or nine months before he was blown to pieces by the Nihilists. He did his duty promptly by the lady, because his royal wife, a Hessian princess, did not die until June, 1890.

IN ITALY'S ROYAL HOUSE.

There have also been one or two such marriages in the Italian royal family. Victor Emmanuel, gallant in love as in war, had a morganatic wife. Probably the obstacle in the way of the union of a young American lady to the King of Italy's cousin the count of Turin, which has filled so much space in the newspapers for months and years past, is because her friends are not willing that she should be palmed off with the mere status of a morganatic consort. Quite right, too.

It must be understood, however, that there is nothing dishonorable to either party in a morganatic marriage, but rather the reverse. Most royalties who contract such a union would no doubt prefer to make their wives their full legitimate spouses, with a right of succession to their rank and fortunes to their issue. But the private laws (the by-laws one might almost call them) of the royal houses of Europe are too firmly founded for them to overthrow. An attempt was made in the seventeenth century to run a royal morganatic wife simultaneously, but the practice did not meet with much approval or imitation. People were scandalized, and a brother of Prince Rupert, and consequently a cousin of Charles II. was the last to try a plurality of wives.

In England the marriage of royalties are regulated by an act of Parliament passed early in the reign of George III, because two royal Dukes had married outside their order. That act commands that no descendent of George II., (except those married to foreigners) can marry without the consent of the sovereign, but if he withholds his consent then the constant one can please himself at last by giving twelve months' notice to the privy council. The last instance of an English royalty marrying beneath his rank was in the case of the late Duke of Cambridge, who married an actress, who took the name of Mrs Fitz-George. Her children, of course, inherited none of their father's royal titles and honors. It is understood that these marriages the bridegroom gives the bride his left hand, and the word morganatic is derived from "morgengabe" or "morning gift" which it was the custom of the bridegroom to give his left handed bride the morning after the nuptials.

36 Dreadnoughts the Record for 1911

London, Jan. 24.—The year 1911 looks like being a record one for naval activity among the great powers, for no fewer than 36 Dreadnoughes are expected to be launched during the year—in other words, an average of one ship every ten days.

At present only 38 of the Dreadnought type are in the water, completing and completed, and this is the result of more than five years' work. In one year alone, from now till December 31st next, this number will almost be doubled.

Of the vessels to be launched this year eleven will be British. On January 17th the first of these were launched, the Thunderer, at Blackwell.

Next to Britain comes Germany with seven launches, but this number includes three which should, according to the original programme, have been launched in 1910.

Four of the eight vessels of the British 1909-1910 programme are already launched, whereas of the four Germans provided for in 1909 only one is launched. The other three will take the water this year, and it is expected also that the four 1910 vessels will be launched before next January.

It is clear, however, according to observers, that if the rate of building is not accelerated these vessels will not leave the stocks until 1912, in which case Great Britain will have launched in 1911 eleven to Germany's three, while in the United States two are expected to take the water; in Russia four; two each in France, Argentine, Chili and Japan, while Austria, Italy, Brazil and Spain will each contribute one.

In this connection Rear Admiral Rosendahl, retired, of the German navy, writes in the January number of the Deutsche Revue, published in Berlin, the first of a series of articles on "The Chief Navies of the World," in which he seeks to prove that England has no need to trouble about increasing her naval strength. He shows for example, that the superiority of the Triple Entente in respect of naval strength over the Triple Alliance is enormous.

When all the vessels now in the course of construction, or whose construction has been sanctioned, are in commission the Triole Entente will, he says, have at its disposal 100 line of battleships, 72 large cruisers, 187 small cruisers, 450 high seas torpedo boats and 202 submarines, whereas the Triple Alliance will have at its disposal only 60 line of battleships, 26 large cruisers, 50 small cruisers, 207 high seas torpedo boats and 32 submarines.

He was carried into a residence across the street and Dr. Morgan was called and three stitches were required to close the wound, which bled freely.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

It is not often an opportunity occurs at your door to see the latest Parisian and New York styles in Hair Goods, yet such is the case, as Prof. Dorenwend of Toronto is visiting this town, and invites your inspection of these goods at his private apartments reserved at the Hotel.

These Hair Goods styles, when properly adjusted protect and ornament the head, soften and beautify the expression of the face, and consequently tone up an aged appearance. Be sure and see them at Oriental Hotel, on Thursday, Jan. 26.

John Noyes is Hurt.

John Noyes, Munro avenue, East City, who was employed by Mr. Jos. Velland in connection with Trent Canal work at Turtle Lake, was badly injured on Saturday as a consequence of an accident during blasting operations. It appears that when the blast was discharged a large stone was hurled about a hundred feet, hitting the ice and then bounding it struck Mr. Noyes on the leg, inflicting a most painful injury. The injured man was brought home on Sunday, being driven into Peterborough by Mr. Darcy, of Burleigh Falls Hotel.

Mr. Mark Though Taken by Surprise Makes Suitable Reply.

A few friends of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Mark, Havelock, gathered on the evening of Jan. 20th, to say good-bye to them. The following address was read :—

To Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Mark,

Dear Friends,—It is with feelings of sincere regret that your many friends of Havelock have learned that owing to your work, you find it necessary to leave our village and as a consequence sever your connection with our church and those helpful institutions with which you have been for some years identified.

As we gather here this evening, memories of the many happy and profitable meetings and associations we have spent together come up fresh before us, and while we hope that the change you are about to make may be for you and your family, most advantageous, yet we cannot think of such a move without feeling that your presence will be greatly missed from the different organizations connected with our church. You may rest assured that you will be followed to your city home by the sincere wishes and earnest prayers of your many warm friends of this place, where you have spent so many enjoyable years. You will please accept these presents as slight tokens of the esteem in which you are held by your Havelock friends. We trust that we may all live so that when our meetings and partings are over here we may all meet in the better land.

Signed in behalf of your friends,

MRS. F. HAIE
G. BUCHANAN.

Mr. Mark made a suitable reply, in which he thanked the friends for their consideration.

ELEVEN PEOPLE WERE KILLED

Cardiff, Wales, Jan. 24.—Eleven persons were killed and 42 others injured, seven of them fatally, when a passenger train crashed into the rear end of a freight train at Hopkinstown, near Pontypridd, to-day.

The freight train was standing still on the tracks when the passenger train, going at a terrific rate of speed, dashed into the rear cars. The dead were crushed to death.

PASSENGER CARS DEMOLISHED

Several of the passenger cars were demolished and the debris was scattered for several hundred feet. Some of the wreckage caught fire from live coals in the boiler of the locomotive, and those who were pinned beneath were badly burned.

A special train was hastily made up here and rushed to Pontypridd, about 27 miles away by rail, carrying medical supplies, doctors and nurses.

The buildings near the scene of the disaster were temporarily turned into hospitals for the care of the wounded.

Wrecking crews were rushed to the scene and the work of rescue was under way within a short time of the collision.

The railroad officials immediately commenced an investigation. It is believed that carelessness in obeying orders was the cause of the disaster.

BITTER FEELING BOTHERS BARRIE

Barrie, Ont., Jan. 24.—The application for a recount of the vote on the local option by-law, which was carried by a majority of eight over the three-fifths, the vote required, came up yesterday before Judge Warner. It was agreed between counsel that the recount should become a scrutiny in order to widen the scope of the investigation. No day was appointed for the enquiry, the judge leaving it to counsel to arrange one which should be mutually agreeable.

The appointment of an assessor has created a stir. A candidate was played in the field by the local optionists in an effort to oust the former officer. Alderman T. T. Young, a strong temperance man and the custom house officer here, voted for Alex. Browles and thereby incurred the enmity of the temperance party, who communicated with the department with the object of forcing his resignation. Since the local option vote, the town has been divided against itself, and the bitterest feelings prevail.

Exiles Look For a Revolt in Portugal

FUGITIVES RESIDENT IN PARIS EXPECT NEWS OF COUNTER OUTBREAK AT HOME ANY TIME.

Ministers are Being Coerced—Provisional Government Has Deceived the People.

Paris, Jan. 25.—The Madrid correspondent of the Temps telegraphs that the Spanish government has received no official confirmation of any serious trouble in Portugal, but believes such trouble to be very possible owing to the difficulties between the government and the Carbonari committees.

The Spanish government has telegraphed for news to the Spanish minister at Lisbon and to the governor of Badajoz, but has received no reply, and it is believed that this is due to the strict censorship evidently prevailing in Lisbon.

Portuguese Exiles Uneasy Blk Fe Considerable uneasiness prevails here in Paris among the Portuguese residents. At the Quai d'Orsay station this morning a Portuguese Royalist, who was seeing some friends off to Lisbon by the train, was the center of a group with whom he was discussing the situation.

"There will certainly be an uprising in Portugal before very long," he said. All our letters point to the great dissatisfaction which is prevalent there. The king is being well informed, and he knows that he has only to wait for the right moment to seize the throne again.

"The provisional government has deceived the people, and the people are beginning to understand it. They were told fairy tales, and they are now face to face with realities. They believed everything would be cheaper, and that all kinds of things, from tramway trips to bread, would cost little or nothing. This was absurd, and they are beginning to find it out.

"Portugal is bound to have economic reforms, but before very long it will get them, and not from the Republicans, who are busy feathering their own nests, but from a stable monarchial government, which will be formed of men who have learned from their country's troubles of the last few months what the country really needs.

The European edition of the New York Herald publishes the following message from its Berlin correspondent:

Not Seen in Berlin—Blk Face

"The Berlin representative of the permanent organization of the Republican party of Portugal gives the following very sensational account of the situation of his own party, based on cipher dispatches he has received in the last few hours.

"The Portuguese in question, who for a long time was Senor Lima's right-hand man, states that the object of the present revolutionary movement is not to re-establish royalty, but to establish 'mobocracy.' The worst features of the situation are that the people are still in possession of the arms by which the recent revolution was won, and that there is no power making itself felt behind the government.

"Workmen appear in the ministers' cabinets, bluntly make demands and the ministers are compelled to quietly acquiesce because some special group stands behind each representative of the workman.

"There are no commanding officers left in the navy, and the men are desperadoes, my informant declares. 'We stand' said this competent authority, 'before something worse than a counter-revolution—namely chaos.'"

"RUDDY" LOWES IS SAFE.

Dead Man on Train Had Killed Himself by Excessive Drinking.

Special to The Times.

Cannington, Jan 25.—"Ruddy" Lowes has wired his father from Kansas City that he is all right. This clears up the doubt about his safety arising from the finding of a railway ticket bearing his name on a man who was found dead on a train bound for Winnipeg.

HARDWARE AS FOOD PROVES GOOD TONIC

AUTOPSY SHOWS INSANE WOMAN LIVES SEVEN YEARS ON NAILS AND SPIKES.

Find 1,446 Pieces of Iron—Pins of the Safety, Hair and Common Variety Included in Her Menus.

New York, Jan. 26.—The ancient rule that "What's one man's meat is another man's hardware" has just been re-established more firmly than ever, and by no less an authority than the Journal of the American Medical Association. The fact that the particular human hardware shop used to demonstrate the ancient truism was a woman and a mulatto does not in any sense weaken the force of the argument.

In the current number of the publication Drs. Vandivert and Mills of the Missouri State Insane Hospital at St. Joseph report the case of Sallie L., whose appetite for nails, bolts, tacks, mowing and reaping machines, and all manner of shelf and heavy hardware, resulting in her death at that institution recently.

SOURCE OF SUPPLY MYSTERY.

Not the least remarkable feature about the case is that, although her depredations extended over seven years, the police have no reports of wholesale burglaries of hardware stores during that period, and as nails, screws and files are not served at that hospital, except on special occasions, there is considerable mystery about the source of her provisions.

The case of the woman puzzled the physicians and her actions became more unaccountable as the end drew near. She seemed to thrive, although partaking only slightly of the hospital fare, and on her death the physicians decided upon an autopsy to relieve their professional curiosity.

FIND UNDIGESTED HARDWARE.

In her stomach they found 1,446 separate articles of hardware and household use, which would have been of much greater benefit somewhere else. These included 433 nails of all sizes, 42 screws, 9 bolts, 105 safety pins, 115 hairpins, 136 common pins and a quantity of table utensils, grape seeds and the like.

In spite of this the woman was able to eat and digest a considerable quantity of ordinary food up to within two weeks of her death.

MRS. LAURA SCHENK DECLARES THAT SHE WILL BE FREED

POPE PIUS MAY END HIS EXILE

A STRANGE STORY COMES FROM ROME AND CIRCULATED IN RELIGIOUS CIRCLES.

Declared Pope Will Leave the Vatican During Italian Jubilee Celebration.

Paris, Jan. 25.—That Pope Pius X will end his long exile in the Vatican at Rome during the Italian jubilee celebration, was the strange story that circulated in religious circles here to-day.

It was even reported that France had agreed to give refuge to the Pontiff and that he would be permitted to reside in the Palace of Lourdes while the jubilee ceremony is taking place in Rome.

According to the report here, his Holiness has decided no longer to tolerate the provocations offered by the Italian Free Masons, and is particularly desirous of leaving Rome during the great celebration when the attitude of the Free Masons is expected to be particularly hostile.

STARVING IN CEMETERY VAULT.

Paterson, N.J., Jan. 25.—Boys wandering through an abandoned cemetery in the Sandy Hill section of the city to-day, found a woman and two girls living in a vault. All were suffering from hunger, cold and exposure, and they were removed by the police to charitable institutions.

A BIG SET-BACK FOR GOWGANDA

Gowganda, Ont., Jan. 25.—During the strongest gale of the winter, fire broke out about noon yesterday in Cohen's dry goods store, practically destroying the southeast portion of the town. The loss will probably be $100,000. The insurance is mostly in Canadian Companies, with about $12,000 with the American companies represented.

The origin of the fire is unknown. The telephone service is already in operation again.

WILL GO BACK TO HER CHILDREN —THE WOMAN BROKE DOWN YESTERDAY.

Daniel Phillips, Erstwhile Sweetheart of Prisoner, Denounced as a Traitor—Attorney Calls Him "a Squirming Worm."

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 25.—While she was being pictured as a character deserving neither sympathy, nor pity in the scathing arraignment of Prosecuting Attorney J. B. Handlan, in his summing up address to-day, Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, who is charged with attempting to poison her husband, broke down. Her form was shaken by sobs which could be heard in nearly every part of the court room.

The prosecutor ridiculed the defence's appeal for sympathy, declaring that a woman who would take her young children upon auto trips exposing them to the degrading conditions such as her relationship with Dan. Phillips, could not ask for sympathy.

Daniel Phillips, erstwhile sweetheart of Mrs. Schenk, was denounced in scathing terms as a traitor to the woman who cared for him when arguments in the case were resumed early this morning.

"This man betrayed and testified against the woman who had lavished money and love upon him," declared Attorney Samuel O. Boyce, when he took up the argument where he had left off yesterday afternoon.

CRIED ALL THROUGH NIGHT.

Mrs. Scahenk came into court on the fifteenth day of her trial looking worn and haggard. The county jail officials said she had cried all through the night. As she entered court she said that she was glad that her ordeal was nearly over.

"I am going to be freed," she said "and then I will go back to my children. Oh, it has been horrible."

When Boyce resumed his arguments he said it would not take long to conclude, and it is believed that the case will go to the jury before night.

Continuing his argument, Attorney Boyce cried in a dramatic manner:

"Gentlemen, I say, as every other man in this court who has red blood in his veins would say, that John Schenk has the God-given right to kill on sight the squirming worm that betrayed Mrs. Schenk."

Again referring to Phillips, Boyce exclaimed: "Thank God in Heaven that Daniel Phillips has left this court room and may heaven interpose and never allow him to enter Ohio county again."

Mr. Boyce took up the testimony of Chauffeur Lundy Wilson, ridiculing it, then declared that if Mrs. Schenk had been the crafty, deceiving wife that she was pictured by the State, she would not have confided in Nurse Kline.

"If this woman had been guilty of poisoning her husband, why did she not confide that to Wilson?" demanded Mr. Boyce. "According to the Chauffeur she confided her relations with Phillips to him. Would not the other admission have been made?"

The case will go to jury late this afternoon.

THIRTEEN MILLIONS SENT OUT OF CANADA.

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—According to a return of the Post-Office Department to-day, Canadians during the past year sent to Great Britain and its possessions, and other European countries, 750,000 money orders, representing upwards of $13,000,000, or an increase of 35 per cent. over the previous year. All this money passes through the Department at Ottawa.

TRADE AGREEMENT A BULKY AFFAIR

IT IS REPORTED THAT IT MAY EXCEED FIFTEEN THOUSAND WORDS IN LENGTH.

Shows its Importance—Contents are Kept Absolutely Secret—Mr. Fielding Reaches Montreal.

Washington, Jan. 25.—It is understood that the announcement with regard to the reciprocity arrangements, concluded between Canada and the United States will be presented to Congress about 4 o'clock on Thursday.

It is understood that the agreement has been printed in pamphlet form, and that it contains between fifteen and twenty thousand words, divided into three divisions. While it might lead to misunderstanding to deduce much from the fact, it would appear that the very size of the agreement would indicate something of its importance.

FIELDING IN MONTREAL.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—The Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, accompanied by Mrs. Fielding, slipped quietly into town last night, en route to Ottawa from Washington, via New York, with the intention of dodging press interviews.

Fears For Czarina

Russian Empress, Victim of Melancholia, Will Visit Nauheim.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 26.—The health of Empress Alexandra, is again a matter of concern to the imperial family and her physicians. Her majesty suffers periods of melancholia. The royal family is planning a long stay at Nauheim, Grand Duchy of Hesse, where the emperor and empress stopped for some time last fall, in order that the empress might have the benefit of the waters.

GRATEFUL MOTHERS.

What Zam-Buk Did For Their Little Ones.

Thousands of mothers in Canada owe a debt of gratitude to Zam-Buk for its cure of their children, and hundreds of them are not slow to recognize the claim.

Mrs. J. Quiding, of Ninette, Man., says: "My little boy was suffering very badly from a form of skin disease over his eye. I applied Zam-Buk to the affected part, and in a very short time, I am pleased to say, the sores were completely healed."

Mrs. F. Miners, of 311 Suffolk St., Guelph, Ont., says: "My little daughter Lorinda (6), contracted a skin disease. This first broke out like tiny water blisters, afterwards taking the form of dry scabs. These would disappear for a short time, and then reappear worse than ever. We tried Zam-Buk, and with each application the irritation and soreness were greatly relieved and the child rested easier. Perseverance with Zam-Buk worked a complete cure."

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

It is not often an opportunity occurs at your door to see the latest Parisian and New York styles in Hair Goods, yet such is the case, as Prof. Dorenwend of Toronto is visiting this town, and invites your inspection of these goods at his private apartments reserved at the Hotel.

These Hair Goods styles, when properly adjusted protect and ornament the head, soften and beautify the expression of the face, and consequently tone up an aged appearance. Be sure and see them at Oriental Hotel, on Thursday, Jan. 26.

Motor League Offers $62,500 for Roads

COMING TO CANADA

It is Expected He Will Leave for Ottawa in the Autumn to Succeed Earl Grey.

London, Jan. 25.—There is reason to believe that the original arrangement for the Duke of Connaught to replace Earl Grey as Governor-General of Canada holds good. It is expected that the Duke will go to Ottawa in the autumn.

MORE LIABILITY FOR DIRECTORS

OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS WHETHER BANKS OR TRUST COMPANIES.

Outcome of the Reflection of the Farmers Bank Failure—The Public Are Restless.

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—A reflection of the unrest in the public as to the organization of new business enterprises, created by the developments arising out of the Farmers Bank failure, was given in the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Commons this morning, when a bill was discussed to incorporate the Security Trusts Corporation, of Regina, Saskatchewan.

Dr. Sproule raised the point that Parliament should insist upon a more direct responsibility of directors and C. A. Wilson, the Liberal M.P. for Laval, expressed the opinion that it would be well for Parliament to enact a general law governing the responsibility of directors of all financial institutions, whether banks or trust companies.

The bill to incorporate the Empire Life Insurance Company, of Canada, with head office in Toronto, was passed after a brief discussion in which Hon. H. R. Emmerson objected to the insurance of children, until E. W. Nesbitt pointed out that such insurance had been legalized in Canada for many years.

Canadian Club Banquet.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 26.—The proposed joint celebration of a century of amity between Canada and the United States will be discussed at the banquet to-morrow night of the Canadian Club of Boston. The guest of honor and chief speaker will be Dr. Michael Clark, of the Province of Alberta, who will speak on "The New West, Immigration and Free Trade."

LEAGUE ADOPTS RECOMMENDATION OF FIFTY CENTS PER HORSE POWER.

Awaits Only the Acceptance of the Ontario Legislature—Tax on 5000 Machines.

The proposed voluntary annual tax of fifty cents per horse power per automobile on all the members of the Ontario Motor League is ready for operation and awaits only the acceptance of the Legislature of Ontario until it becomes law.

At the annual meeting of the league at the King Edward Hotel last evening, the report of the executive committee supporting the suggestion first made some months ago, was adopted and the committee was instructed to take the necessary steps to ascertain whether the gift would be received by the Government. It will require special legislation to put the private tax on a public basis and make it available for the use of the Province's purposes, and it is expected the matter will be taken into consideration at the present session of the legislature.

FOR MAINTENANCE ONLY.

The adoption of the report by the league contained a provision that the money raised by the tax shall be used for the maintenance of the improved roads and not for the building of them. The plans for the application of the amount have not been perfected as yet, but, according to a prominent local motorists, it is thought most of it will be used in keeping competent staffs of men, for they are the principal equipment in preserving roadways.

TAX ON 5000 MACHINES.

When asked for an opinion as to the probable amount of the money to be raised, Mr. H. B. Wills, one of the directors of the league, said:

"There are approximately 5000 automobiles in Ontario now. The average for the horse power of all the cars would be somewhere about twenty-five."

It may be seen from this that the annual total tax would be about $62,500. If applied only to the maintenance of already improved roads, this would go a long way. The league's present membership is over 1700.

Several members were asked as to where the greater part of the amount would be spent, but their reply was that, as the Government will decide that, and as the offer has not been accepted yet, it is impossible to say further than to state that it will all be expended on the portions of the Provincial roads which have either already been improved by the Government or will be improved by the recent appropriations.

THE WEATHER.

Fine and mild.

Cobourg is Coming with Special Train

Cobourg, Jan. 25.—By defeating the Lindsay Midgets here last night by a score of 6 goals to 4, the local Juniors tied up with Peterboro for premier honors in this district. The half-time score was 4—3 also in Cobourg's favor.

The Lindsay septet were accompanied by 150 rooters, coming by special train, and they certainly made their presence felt. The attendance last night was the largest that has attended a hockey game here this season, and the excitement was at fever heat.

Although the ice was soft, in fact water on it in places, the pace from start to finish was fast, and never slackened. The play was of the individual style, with an occasional two-man combination, owing to the ice conditions.

The entire Cobourg team worked like beavers. The forwards checked back hard, and shot at every opportunity. In fact, they checked so strenuously at times that they served eight penalties to the visitor's three.

The fact that the boys from the Scugog district were defeated was no disgrace. They tried hard, and the very teams seemed to be evenly matched. On two occasions the visitors hit the Cobourg goal post, and missing sure counters by inches.

The Cobourg youngsters will play the final and deciding game in this district at Peterboro next Monday night, and are running a special train for the occasion. The winner of this match winns the district, and a large delegation of Cob rooters is sure to accompany the team.

The referee was F. H. Sproule, of Toronto.

Dethroned Monarch has Become Proficient in English Language.

London, Jan. 26.—One who was brought into contact with the dethroned King Manuel during the last few weeks tells how the king now speaks English far more fluently than before. He admits, with some little pride, that he understands the language well enough to read a morning paper with interest. It is highly probable that he will go to Oxford University, though he will have to make considerable advance in his studies in order to be able to matriculate. Two tutors are to be provided for him and he expects to be able to give up most of the morning to his books.

His mother also is assisting him in his studies. Mathematics, he frankly confesses, is his weak spot at the present time, and he hopes to show speedy improvement in this once he has settled down amid his surroundings at Richmond.

PATHETIC STORY OF THE RAIL.

Globe—The annals of Canadian railroading contain few more pathetic stories than that of the death of Daniel Harrington, of Lambton, the aged C.P.R. switchman, who, while delirious from pneumonia, eluded his friends, lit his lantern, and went out to his duty on the line. He was cut down by a passing train, and the lantern was still in his hand when he was found. We sometimes make light of the services of the splendid body of men who watch over the lives of passengers on Canada's railways, but there are thousands like Daniel Harrington, whose duty is ever foremost in their thought, waking or sleeping.

New York is to have another highest building. The highest building in New York is a good deal like the biggest battleship in that it just about gets itself completed when plans for a higher one are made.

One Hundred Clerks Fled for Their Lives

THE GENERAL OFFICES OF THE DOMINION STEEL CO. ARE DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Several Barely Escaped With Their Lives — Fire Not Under Control.

Sydney, N.S., Jan. 25.—The general offices of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. are a mass of flames, and the building will probably be a total loss.

Over one hundred clerks and head of the department had to flee from the building, and several barely escaped with their lives.

At the moment it looks as if the building might be razed to the ground.

MANUEL TO VISIT ITALY.

Will Keep Clear of Rome, Owing to Complications with Vatican.

Rome, Jan. 26.—It is reported that King Manuel will next March, pay a visit to Queen Maria Pia, his grandmother at Naples. Her Majesty's state of health is causing some anxiety.

It is not believed that King Manuel will come to Rome, as if he came, and visited King Victor Emmanuel, with whom he is related, he could not afterward be received by the Pope. On the one hand, he could not slight King Victor, while, on the other hand he would hardly, if only from political reasons, be likely to offend the Pope.

SMOKING AT HOCKEY MATCHES

Ladies Forced to Leave on Account of Smoke.

The smoking at the hockey matches is becoming disgraceful. It would not be noticed so much if those on the east side were the only ones who indulged, but when those on the west side begin to smoke before the ladies it is going too far. At the match Tuesday evening a couple of ladies were unable to stay to see the game out, on account of the smoke. They will not likely come back and probably stop some of their friends also. There are notices up that no smoking is allowed, but it is not enforced. This is a reflection on the management of the rink, but they have probably overlooked the matter in the rush of the many duties to which they have to attend. If the patrons are not gentlemen enough to refrain from smoking in the presence of ladies they should be made to. The smoke is also very bad for the players. Those watching, who smoke, have probably never taken enough part in strenuous exercises to know what a bad effect smoke has on athletes. The air Tuesday night was blue with smoke, and four or five of Peterborough's players were sick as a consequence. Smoking has been stopped in the rinks in Toronto and Kingston and why not here. A suggestion as to the way to enforce this rule would be to have a man on each side of the rink who could stop it or eject the offender.

CLOVER IS KING

Napoleon Carron brought to the Chatham market a load of clover seed which weighed up to 5,230 lbs., making 98 and a fraction bushels. He was paid $7 a bushel for the seed, and the cheque which he received for the whole load was made out for $820.66.

NO REFLECTION

"Well," answered his wife, "it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor."

THE MORNING TIMES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1911.

THE GOSPEL OF CLOTHES FOR COUNTRY DRESSMAKERS.

An actress who has lately made a hit in New York, and who is about to take "the road," will start out with something besides her play. She announces that she is going to carry a side line and do a little missionary work en tour.

This benignant lady is worried by the conviction that the village dressmakers of the "one-night stands" do not get a fair chance at the fashions. It takes both too much money and too much time to make trips to the metropolis, so the poor artists of the provinces have to rely wholly on the fashion papers with dire results.

Their benefactress is going to take the road with an outfit of model gowns. She will not wear them on the stage, but will exhibit them in the sample-rooms of the various country hotels. Whenever possible, she will give short talks in the afternoon. The forlorn artificers of the back counties will thus be enabled to examine the models at short range, and to copy or adapt them to their hearts' content.

This is as it should be. The fashionable modistes of the large cities have their dressmakers' shows every year, where all the newest modes are displayed and the various styles discussed. The country seamstress has no such advantages—or has not had them till now.

Success to the propagandist, and good fortune for her converts. Yet one point arises to perplex. The taste of the stage star, even in private life, is apt to be rather accentuated. "Professional" clothes stand out strongly, even in the city streets; how much more salient would they be at small-town "literaries" and donation parties! Let it be hoped that the costumes which are to ravish the eyes and instruct the taste of the New England circuit and of western New York will be relatively plain and quiet.

AN ECONOMIST ON THE SIZE OF FAMILIES.

Professor Carver of Harvard comments rather savagely on the advocacy of large families among the poor. His own "plan" is small families for the poor and large ones for the rich. This duplex remedy, he thinks, would solve many of our terrible social problems, as it would tend to distribute wealth more widely and to prevent sweating and injustice.

Another learned professor has just shown that the middle and poorer classes in America are adopting their end of the "plan" and reducing the size of the family. In some rural sections the rate of increase is lower than in the cities. In 1800 the American population was doubling itself by natural increase every twenty-five years; between 1890 and 1900 the increase for the native population was only 16 per cent. The families of newcomers are apt to be large; the American family, in any class, is notoriously small.

But how can the rich be induced to increase and multiply? Here Professor Carver is giving counsel of perfection. Comfort, wealth, culture, leisure, in every part of the world, make for small families. To some extent this is evidently a law of nature, but largely it is due to a dislike of burdens and responsibilities. Too many of the wealthy and refined are merely selfish in declining to bring children into the world. Biologists and eugenists are very hard on them, and preach duty and race preservation, but the effect of the lecturing is negligible.

Has the Harvard economist found a way to impress and influence the wealthy, educated and prosperous?

You are probably aware that pneumonia always results from a cold, but you never heard of a cold resulting in pneumonia when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy was used. Why take the risk when this remedy may be had for a trifle? For sale by all dealers.

THE RED YEAR

LOUIS TRACY.

(CONLINUED)

...press... ...eyes grew ... bolted. He could neither send the ryot ashore nor trust to the help of any neighboring village, since men were already galloping along the left bank with obviously hostile designs.

As there was a favorable breeze and the current was swift and strong, he wondered why these pursuers strove to keep the boat in sight. Then it was borne in on him that they had a definite object. Could it be possible that they knew of the presence of other craft lower down the river? Was he being called on within the hour to make a last stand against treachery on the deck of the...? Then must certain death be his portion? He was the world head-quarters of the...phone, and could ask for no...forces for escape to the...and the night. Yet some plan...devised to keep faith with the...arrested zemindar. The man...not die if left where he was for another forty-eight hours, or even longer. But the word of a sahib was a sacred thing. Whatever the difficulty of communicating with Mohammed Rasul, he must overcome it somehow.

In his perplexity, his eyes fell on the two girls. Being ladies from Fyzabad they might be able to help him with some knowledge of the locality. Summoning Chumru to take the helm he went forward and spoke to them.

Now it is an enduring fact that a woman's regard for her personal appearance will engross her mind when graver topics might well be to the fore. No sooner did these sorrow laden daughters of Eve realize that they were in a position of comparative safety, and in the company of a good looking young man of their own race than they attempted to effect some change in their toilette. A handkerchief dipped in the river, a few twists and collings of refractory hair, a slight readjustment of disordered bodices and crumpled skirts—above all the gleam of the magic lamp of hope that illumined an abyss of despair—and the amazing result was that Malcolm found two pretty, shy, tremulous maidens awaiting him, instead of the dishevelled, woe-begone women he had seen pushed down the steps of the ghat.

He introduced himself with the well-mannered courtesy of the period, and in response the elder of the pair raised her blue eyes to his and told him that since the 16th of June until the previous day they had been hiding in the hut of a native woman, mother of their ayah.

"My dear father was killed by Mr. Tucker's side," said she. "He was the deputy commissioner of Fattehpore. Keene is our name—I am Harriet, this is my sister Grace. We only came out from England last cold weather—"

A sudden recollection brought a cry of surprise from Frank.

"Why," he said, "you were fellow-passengers on the Assaye with Miss Winifred Mayne?"

"Yes, do you know her? What has become of her? We were told that everyone at Meerut was killed."

"Thank Heaven, she was alive and well when I last saw her three days ago."

"And her uncle? Is he living? She was very much attached to him. How did she escape from Meerut?" broke in Grace, eagerly.

"I wish they had never left Meerut. The Mutiny at that station collapsed in a couple of hours. Unfortunately, they are now both penned up in the Residency at Lucknow, which is surrounded by goodness only knows how many thousands of rebels. But I must give you Winifred's recent history at another time. I want you to tell me something about this neighborhood. What is the nearest town on the river, and which bank is it on?"

"Unfortunately, our acquaintance with this part of India is very slight," said Miss Harriet Keene, sadly. "We remained at Calcutta four months with our mother, who died there, without having seen our dear father after a separation of five years. We came up country in March, and were going to Naini Tal when the Mutiny broke out. We only saw the Ganges three or four times before our ayah brought us across on that terrible night when father was murdered."

Malcolm had heard many such tensely dramatic stories from fugitives who had reached Lucknow during July. Phrases of pity or consolation were powerless in face of these tragedies. But he could not forbear asking one question:

"How did you come to fall into the hands of Hossein Beg?"

"We were betrayed by some children," was the simple answer. "They saw our ayah's mother baking chupatties, day after day, sufficient for four people. My sister and I lived nearly three weeks in a cow-byre, never daring, of course, to approach even the door. The children made some talk about the lavish food supply in the old woman's hut, and the story reached the ears of their father. He, like all the other natives here, seems to hate Europeans as though they were his deadliest enemies. He spied on us, discovered our whereabouts, and yesterday morning we were dragged forth, while the poor creatures to whom we owed our lives were beaten to death before our very eyes."

The speaker was a fair English girl of twenty. Her sister was eighteen, and their previous experience of the storm and fret of existence was drawn from an uneventful childhood in India, four years in a Brighton school, and a twelvemonth in a Brussels convent!

Malcolm choked back the hard words that rose to his lips, and sought such local information as the ryot could give. It was little. The tiller of the Indian fields lives and dies in his village and has no interests beyond the horizon. This man visited the Ganges once a year on a religious feast, and perhaps twice in the same period in connection with the shipping of grain on his brother's boat. To that extent, but no further, did his store of general knowledge pass beyond the narrower limits of those who dwelt far from a river highway.

Yet it was he who first espied a new and most active peril.

"Look, huzoor," he cried suddenly. "They have made signs to the Fattehpore ghat. Two boats are following us."

And then Malcolm found that the real danger came from the opposite shore. It was a case of falling on Scylla when trying to avoid Charybdis. He ... afterwards that the

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very vauable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car. should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Why This Hesitation in Appointing a Successor to Earl Grey.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—The controversy going the rounds with regard to the appointment of a new Governor-General is interesting and in some cases ridiculous.

Why should there be so much hesitation about the appointment of the next Governor-General of Canada? So far as this hesitation results from a desire to appoint a Governor who represents the sentiment of the United Kingdom as it veered from one party to the other. Now, why not give us a Governor who represents the sentiment of the United Kingdom of to-day, its humanitarian spirit, its awakened zeal for social reforms? no one will complain. But why this reluctance to name his successor? Canada is not a difficult country to govern; as the misguided persons who appointed Governor Metcalfe imagined seventy years ago. We have got along very well with Governors appointed by Liberal and Conservative Governments—men who represent the sentiment of the United Kingdom as it veered from one party to the other. Now, why not give us a Governor who represents the sentiment of the United Kingdom of to-day, its humanitarian spirit, its awakened zeal for social reforms?

The people of the United Kingdom elected a Liberal Government to power six years ago, and twice since they have approved of the policy and record of that Government. The Government is vested with full authority, and there is no reason why it should not assert its Liberalism in the appointment of a Governor-General of Canada. No one expects that the Governor-General shall take sides in our public questions in Canada. He is one of the links between the people of Canada and the people of the United Kingdom, and for that reason it is well that he should represent the prevailing sentiment of the people of the United Kingdom.

ILLITERATES IN 1910

Over 40,000 Voted at the General Election Throughout the United Kingdom

Much interest attaches to a White Paper just issued, containing a return of the "number of persons who voted as 'illiterates' to each constituency of the United Kingdom at the General Election of 1910, and the total number of votes polled in each constituency." The return, among other things, may be taken as a rough test of the spread of education in the constituencies.

In regard to Scotland there were 1,563 "illiterates" among the 376,721 voters in the counties, and 481 out of 285,721 voters for the burgh constituencies. Ireland's county total of "illiterates" was 20,918 out of 151,103 voters, and her borough total 1,597 out of 9,456 voters. No county in England and Wales and no county in Ireland is able to present a "clean sheet" in this matter. Three counties in Scotland, however, can claim this distinction. No single one of the 5,111 constituents of Mr. Cathcart Wason, in far Orkney, was unable to attest his vote by his signature, and the 3,676 men of Peebles who went to the polls showed that in their pursuit of pleasure they had not neglected that of education. West Aberdeen, Mr. J. M. Henderson's seat, was the third county England's nearest approach to this record among the counties was in Mid-Derby, where only three voters out of 11,426 were "illiterates." Turning to the cities and boroughs, Mr. F. E. Smith may be congratulated on the fact that no one on the 12,591 voters of Walton was compelled to resort to a "mark" to indicate the nature of his political convictions, and that Colonel Seely was rejected by one of the most intelligent of constituencies is illustrated by the fact that there was not a single illiterate in all the 5,650 voters of the Abercromby division. Mr. Balfour's and Sir F. Banbury's constituents revealed no traces of illiteracy, and the men of East Marylebone also had a clean sheet. The 3,538 voters of King's Lynn were without illiterate taint. Dulwich, Gloucester, Grantham, Hampstead, Norwood, South Paddington, St. George's, the Strand, Warwick, and Windsor, in England, just missed a "clean sheet" by one. Among the Scottish burghs South Aberdeen was without illiterates, and North Aberdeen, Kirkaldy Burghs, and West Edinburgh had one illiterate apiece. In the counties, in addition to the three clean-sheet divisions already mentioned, East Aberdeen and Banff had one illiterate voter each, and Forfar two illiterate voters. A table given shows that the 4,533 graduates who took part in the contest for the University of London still retained the ability to append their signatures to a document. At the other end of the scale Hitchin, among the county divisions of England, had 189 illiterates out of a poll of 9,638. In the case of the Welsh counties the highest total was 87, out of 10,200 voters, in Brecon. Among the English and Welsh cities and boroughs Dudley had 375 illiterates out of a poll of 16,497. In the case of the Scottish counties, Inverness-shire polled 328 illiterates out of 7,373 voters; while 230 of the 14,638 voters of the Kilmarnock Burghs were classed as illiterates. Ireland's highest total, among the counties, was 1,583 out of 5,617 in East Donegal, and a larger proportion still, 1,406 out of 4,883, in South Mayo; the largest total in an Irish borough was in Derry, where there were 536 illiterate voters out of 4,813.

FOR THE FARMER

Something About the Institutes That are Conducted for His Benefit

The attendance at Farmers' Institute meetings during the year ending June 30th last was about 300,000, including the Special Institutes for discussing fruit, poultry, seed, livestock, cheese and cream. That few phases of farm life are left untouched at these annual public meetings is shown by the following wide range:—"Seed Selection," "The Peach Industry," "The Heavy Horse," "Rotation of Crops," "Beef Cattle," "Destruction of Weeds," "Winter Egg Production," "Stable Ventilation," "Corn and the Silo," "The Stairway to Success," "Building Good Roads," "Cereal Grains," "Spraying," "Industrial Alcohol," "Small Fruits," "Cement for Building," "Our Canadian Heritage," "Getting Pleasure Out of Farm Life," "The Bacon Trade," "Hive and Mieses," "Growing Lambs for Profit," "Education of Farmers' Sons," "Underdraining," "Our Bird Friends," "Care of the Apiary," "Apple Growing," "Our Insect Pests."

NO DINING-ROOM

While the reconstruction of the burned wing of the Parliament buildings has proceeded far enough to assure accommodation for the various committees of the Legislature when the House settles down to business, the members will be obliged to secure their meals outside the buildings. The dining-room and kitchen are in that portion of the building being repaired and would take up too much space if placed elsewhere at present.

MISS BOTHA AS CARMEN

On the posting of bills advertising the appearance of General Botha's daughter as Carmen in an amateur operatic production at Johannesburg the South African Premier received shoals of letters from Dutch residents objecting to the performance as "ungodly." Miss Botha, therefore, decided not to appear.

DEPOPULATING IRELAND

The Number of Those Leaving Erin Still Exceeding the Births

The report of the Registrar-General on the population of Ireland in 1909 shows that during the year a decrease took place in the country of 896 persons. There was a natural increase of population of 27,786, but 28,676 persons emigrated during the period.

Births numbered 102,759, deaths 74,973, and marriages 23,859. Of the last, 15,957 were between Roman Catholics.

The marriages of bachelors with spinsters constituted 89.5 per cent. of the total, those of widowers and spinsters were 6.6 per cent., marriages of widowers and widows were 2.4 per cent., and those of widowers and widows formed 1.5 per cent. of the total marriages. Thus of the men married 9.1 per cent. were widowers, and of the women 3.9 per cent. were widows, so that in twelve instances in every 100 marriages one or both of the contracting parties had been in the married state before. Of the 22,650 men who married, the number under age was 337, or 1.67 per cent., and of the women 1,560 or 6.84 per cent. Of the 102,759 births, 52,726 were boys and 50,033 girls. Fourteen hundred and four of the former were illegitimate, and 1,355 of the latter. There were in 1909 1,291 twin births, and seventeen cases of triplets.

RITES OF VOODOOISM

Human Sacrifices to a Snake-God Now Common in Haiti

A secret religious sect, worshipping a god known as Voodoo, the Snake God, and which offers up human sacrifices, is again showing signs of vitality in Haiti. The matter has been brought to the notice of the German authorities by the inspector of police who had made a thorough investigation.

The following summary of the report is published in the Cologne Gazette, and from this it would appear that a woman, who is now in prison in the capital awaiting trial was directly responsible for the killing and eating of five children.

In her house I found a barrel containing pickled human flesh, the remains of a child aged about twelve. It is, unfortunately, well known that the Voodoo faith has still many adherents.

The priests of the cult are all-powerful, and the sacrifices are usually animals, but occasionally, as in the present instance, young children are immolated. The god himself takes the form of a snake, and his mouthpiece is a priest, who is assisted by a priestess.

Estels Liberia, the young woman concerned in the present affair, was at the time high priestess of the cult. At the great ceremony in honor of the snake-god the high priest and priestess sit on a double throne, the woman being clothed in nothing but a gorgeous girdle. Worshippers of both sexes attend with red cloths round their loins. On an altar stands a wooden box containing the snake, which is brought from its box and worshipped by all present, gifts being placed on the altar while the populace prays for the fulfilment of some great public desire.

Then begins a wild dance, headed by the chief priestess, who discards her girdle as the dancing grows more furious, and a halt is not called until the people begin to fall exhausted to the ground. If any misfortune has befallen the people a sacrifice is offered to the god.

It was on one of these occasions that Estels Liberia insisted on the sacrifice of a human victim, and, in concert with a man named Conzo Pelle, decided to kidnap a girl, a niece of Conzo. The child's mother was enticed away, and on her return was informed that the chief priestess had called on her daughter. The mother seemed greatly honored, and a special ceremony was immediately arranged.

When all were assembled, the girl was fetched from her hiding-place, laid in front of the altar, and strangled by her uncle. Her head was cut off, and all those present drank some of the blood, which was collected in a bowl. The flesh was subsequently cooked at Conzo's house, and instead of being eaten, as had formerly been customary, was preserved.

Two girls who had overlooked the cooking of the flesh were declared to have offended the god, and these, too, were then similarly sacrificed, their deaths being followed by two more a few days later.

DADDY'S CALLING

Daddy is calling, calling his sonny:
But, though I love him, I'm not, as you see,
Anxious to answer: I know it sounds funny,
'Cause I know Daddy has something for me.

Yes, it is naughty to seem so unwilling;
Boys ought to answer their Daddies with glee
But I'd much rather that someone was filling
Daddy's kind thoughts at this moment but me.

Why don't I go when he softly calls "Freddy!"
Waiting to take me, I know, on his knee?
Well, it's just this—with his slipper all ready,
Daddy is anxiously waiting for me!

QUACKS STILL ABOUND

Even Belief in Witchcraft Prevails in Some Portions of England and Wales

Witchcraft has arrived at the dignity of mention in a Government Blue-book. In a Local Government Board report issued recently in London it is stated that in a few of the more outlying rural districts (of England and Wales) belief in witchcraft is still held by a few people.

Herbalists are said to be chiefly popular in the Midlands and North, where some vaunt spurious degrees and give certificates which are actually accepted by registrars of death. They "seriously diminish the chances of cure, lead to a great amount of unnecessary pain and suffering, and premature death," and have caused the spread of small-pox and other infectious diseases by ignorant diagnosis and mistaken treatment.

The North is also the chosen ground of the bonesetter, and in parts of Wales belief in these men is said to be implicit.

Other sources of danger dealt with are unqualified dentists posing as "Institutes" and the like, who sacrifice on an enormous scale healthy teeth," supply ill-fitting teeth, and poison with anaesthetics of which they have no knowledge; unqualified opticians who write all sorts of letters after their names, and injure eyesight with worthless glasses, and quacks who sell nostrums at shops or street corners—to cure cancer, consumption, and other grave diseases, which lead to the spread of disease and death.

THOSE FINGER PRINTS

Tell-Tale Evidence in Identifying and Tracing Criminals

The science of finger-prints is comparatively young. Though Scotland Yard possesses some tens of thousands of records, it was only in 1901 that the system of identification by finger-print was officially adopted.

But in that short time the authorities have proved that their system is almost infallible. It has enabled them to make no less than forty-four thousand identifications, and that without error, so far as is known.

The bulbs of the fingers of human beings are marked with a number of very fine ridges running in certain directions, and arranged in patterns. These are classed under four primary types—arches, loops, whorls, and composites, and it has been proved that these patterns persist in all their details throughout the whole period of human life.

As a consequence, the police officials whenever summoned to investigate a case of crime, search first for finger-prints, and these can usually be found. When an arrest is made, finger-prints are taken from the prisoner's hand, and if they tally with those taken on the scene of the crime one of the strongest pieces of evidence it is possible to obtain is there against him.

The finger-print collection of Scotland Yard is now a huge one, and a search amongst these records will frequently enable them to discover who the culprit of a misdeed happens to be, so that finger-prints are not only a form of identification, but a valuable help in tracing criminals.

Naturally, these finger-print impressions are jealously guarded.

THE LARGEST LOAF

Baked Recently in Texas—Weighed 140 Pounds—12 Feet Long

The largest loaf of bread in the world was baked the other day by Andrew Newberg, of Austin, Texas. This gigantic mass of the Staff of Life weighed 140 pounds, and was two feet high, three feet wide, and twelve feet long.

After the ingredients were mixed, the baking process consumed more than an hour, a special oven being used for the purpose.

The loaf was sent to a barbecue at Moulton, where it was cut and distributed to a large crowd. Mr. Newberg accompanied the bread to its destination to see that it was safely carried.

By making this loaf, Mr. Newberg breaks his own record for the largest loaf of bread in the world, which was one weighing a hundred pounds, sent to the Louisana Exhibition in 1904.

DESIGNS FOR NEW COINS

A Proclamation by the King determining the new designs for gold and bronze coins has been published in the "Gazette." The effigy of the reigning monarch will appear on the obverse impression, and, except that the inscription is to read, "Georgius v. Dei Gra: Britt: Omn: Rex Fid: Def: Ind: Imp:" there will be no change on the reverse. That of the gold coins is to contain "the image of St. George armed; sitting on horseback, attacking the dragon with a sword, and a broken spear upon the ground, and the date of the year," with a graining upon the edge. The bronze coins, with King George's head on the obverse, will present on the reverse the familiar impression of "the figure of Britannia seated on a rock surrounded by the sea, her right hand holding a shield which rests against the rock, while in her left hand she grasps a trident." It will be noticed that no mention is made of restoring the lighthouse. As at present, the bronze coins will have their value—penny, halfpenny, farthing—plainly stated. The Proclamation is to come into force on January 1 next.

MUSICAL NUMBERS.

In the T.A.S. Minstrels for To-Night and To-morrow Night.

The following are the musical numbers in the T.A.S. minstrels to be held in St. Peter's School Hall, to-night and Friday night of this week, Jan. 26th and 27th:

Back at Dear Old Home Sweet Home—George Daly.
Pickaninny Mine—Frank Hickey.
Liza—George Heary.
Honey I Will Long for You—Joseph Minicola.
Much Obliged to You—Wm. O'Brien.
Take Me Back to Dear Old Dixie—Joseph Mercier.
If They Only let Old Adam's Rib Alone—Herb. Callaghan.
I am Longing for My Old Kentucky Home—Harry Quinlan.
Never, Never—George Lynch.

As can be seen nothing will be lacking in the musical end of the performance and with eight good end men, there's a laugh every minute.

The Olio is in keeping with the first part and two of the numbers in it are especially comical and laugh producing, viz: "Twenty Minutes for Refreshments," by O'Brien & O'Brien and "The First Rehearsal," a quartette led by Prof. John Philip Sousa Lynch.

The tickets are selling rapidly and it would be well for those who have not yet marked their seats to do so at once as a crowded house is assured for both nights. The plan is at Jas. Lynch's drug store. The performance will be well staged and nothing will be left undone to make this one of the best minstrel show performances ever put on in Peterborough.

WARSAW.

Skating has been fair all week and quite a number enjoy the sport, including a great many married ladies.

Several young people from the village attended the Bachelors' Ball at Lakefield Wednesday last. Several also went to the carnival on Friday evening.

A very successful at home was held at the residence of Mr. Sam. Bell of this town on Friday evening in honor of Mr. Robt. Hill. Mr. Hill is shortly leaving for the west and his many friends were pleased to gather together to give him their best wishes.

Hockey practice is the order of the day, the local team being bent on winning.

It is reported that a Carnival will be held at an early date.

Mr. R. Nicholl of Norwood, has been in the village for a few days.

On Monday evening, the local hockey team ran up against a hard proposition in Lakefield with a score of eight—one in favor of the Lakefield septette. The game was clean and fast, the ice being in excellent condition. A number of young ladies accompanied the team.

Mr. McQuaig is getting ice out of the pond. He is getting it farther up the pond this year.

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS

It Will Be Money In Your Pocket To Do So

Everyone is anxious to make money. Everyone has an ambition to get rich. Some men DO get rich. Others remain poor. The difference is simply a difference of methods. Nearly all of us save some money, but we do not let these savings earn anything for us. THE MAN WHO SAVES HIS MONEY AND LETS THE SAVINGS EARN SOMETHING FOR HIM is making it do double duty. Take the history of all the very wealthy men of the country and learn how many of them made their fortunes by simply saving what they earned. Not one of them did. They saved but they immediately put their savings to work for them. YOU WANT TO GET TO THE TOP OF THE LADDER, YOU WANT TO ACCUMULATE SOMETHING FOR YOUR OLD AGE. THEN YOU HAD BETTER PUT YOUR SAVINGS TO WORK AND LET THEM HELP YOU DO IT.

In almost any ordinary investment a man cannot make his money earn over 8 per cent. Mining offers you greater opportunities. I am going to offer you an opportunity that has promise of earning for you 800 per cent or even more. I want to take you into partnership with me, in an enterprise that will probably make us all independent for the balance of our lives. YOU MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFERING. The Gold Queen Mining Company, of which I am president, has over 135 acres of rich mineral ground in one of the most prosperous mining districts of the world. We have already expended thousands of dollars in developing this property and we have struck ore that is very rich. We need a mill to extract the precious metal from this ore. We need a little help in building this mill. Are you willing to subscribe a portion of the amoont necessary to do it? In numbers there is strength, and even though your subscription be a very small one, we are willing to give you a part ownership in this great enterprise, in return for it. We are willing to take you in on an equal basis with us and give you the benefit of all your savings may earn for you. The men behind this proposition are all successful business men. They are in this business to make it pay and for every dollar they earn for themselves they will earn one for you. REMEMBER: THIS IS NOT A PROSPECT—IT IS A MINE WITH ORE IN IT. But a small amount of money is necessary to build our mill. We have decided to offer only a very limited number of shares at the present price, and as soon as this amount is secured the price will be advanced to a much greater figure. NOW IS THE TIME FOR YOU TO ACT. YOU ARE GETTING IN WITH THE ORGANIZERS OF THE COMPANY AT GROUND FLOOR PRICES. YOU ARE COMING INTO A BONA FIDE PARTNERSHIP WITH US AND WITH NO PARTNERSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES. Read what Mr. Van Wagenen, one of the foremost mining engineers of the country has to say: "I would advise the immediate erection of a ten-stamp mill with cyanide equipment, to treat your gold ores, and a separate concentrating plant to handle your copper pyrites, thus reducing the shipping weight 6 to 1, and eventually put in a smelter in connection with the mill, with a ten-stamp mill on your property and a daily production of 50 tons of ore. I CAN PROMISE YOU A NET EARNING OF $300.00 PER DAY or $109,500 per year and that can be increased to ten times as much as soon as tunnels A and B are finished, and added milling equipment is installed. The economical method is the best. Start with a ten-stamp mill and let your stockholders be content with 10 per cent per annum until you have increased your milling facilities, and install your smelting plant to treat your concentrates. THEN YOU CAN PAY THEM 400 TO 500 PER CENT DIVIDENDS PER YEAR FOR THE NEXT TEN YEARS ON THE PRESENT VALUATION OF YOUR STOCK, 5 CENTS PER SHARE, and this out of the new discovered vein alone." Now if you want to get in with us on this proposition you must act quickly, for the present allotment of shares will not last long. The man who buys now will get his shares at the very rock bottom price. The one who waits until later will without a doubt pay many times what it is being offered for now. Arrangements may be made to pay for your subscription on the easy payment plan. Write at once for full information and detailed literature explaining all about it. Write today. Do not wait another minute or you may be too late.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY IN NORTH COUNTRY---EATEN BY WOLVES

HIS BRIDE FOUND ALMOST DEAD FROM BITTER COLD AND LACK OF FOOD.

A Horrible Discovery—Her Hair Was Turned White From Awful Strain—Intense Suffering From Exposure.

Cobalt, Jan. 27.—The story of a terrible tragedy of the north came to light from a district 45 miles north of Gowganda, in which Homer Wilson, a trapper, was devoured by wolves, and his wife, a bride of a few weeks, was found almost dead from cold and fear.

Wilson started for trapping territory and his wife insisted on accompanying him on snowshoes. They broke the trail to Thompson's Claims where the last habitations exist and from there they went away north to Spawning Lake and built a log shack and started tow work.

One day Wilson set out on a round of traps which would take two days, but not returning at his accustomed time, his wife grew anxious.

CAME ACROSS EMPTY TENT.

A man named Dumont a companion of Wilson's, several days later came across the empty tent in which utensils were scattered about the same as when the trapper left, but saw no sign of Wilson.

The heavy snows had covered any trail. Dumont started for Thompson's Claims, and organized a search party. It was headed by Rev. J. A. Cochrane and immediately commenced the return trip, making seventy long miles without resting. The party accomplished the journey in good time and found Mrs. Wilson in a terrible condition. She had made an effort to get to the settlement, but without snowshoes, had made only two miles in two days.

SANK TO WAIST IN SNOW.

The snow was deep and she sank to the waist at every step and returned to the shack, hands and feet horribly frost bitten. With difficulty she lighted a fire and kept herself alive. Her hair had turned white with the strain. Food was almost gone and every night wolves howled about the door. Rescuers took her back to Thompson's Claims and then to Gowganda, where she received treatment and will recover. No trace of her husband has been found and friends are certain that he fell a prey to the wolves.

An Aeroplane Excursion.

Mr. J. D. Armstrong, well-known knight of the grip, states that he is arranging for an aeroplane flight to take place at Peterborough at an early date. The start will be made from Armour's Hill, East City, and probably will be over the city a few times and return. Mr. Armstrong says that the aeroplane which will be used on the occasion will carry several passengers, himself amongst the number. He extended a cordial invitation to the editor of this great family journal to go along, but we will retire in favor of one of our local contemporaries. The editor of this great family journal is naturally of a retiring disposition anyway.

THE 57TH REGIMENT BAND

At a business meeting of the 57th Regiment Band, held on Thursday night, on the conclusion of a splendid rehearsal, it was decided to purchase a complete and modern line of drummer's accessories—commonly known to the profession as "traps." The order, which went forward yesterday, will include a xylophone, which although really a solo instrument, is also used in many ways for the embellishment of character sketches. One of the most popular "novelettes" presented by the Imperial Grenadier Guards' Band at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition last year was a xylophone solo, and Bandmaster Glidden expects to have one or more of these up his sleeve for the edification of next summer's concert goers. The magnificent set of chimes purchased last year will also be more in evidence at next season's concerts, the management having decided to place a capable musician in charge of this costly addition to the band's equipment. Speaking of equipment—the quality of which means so much to any musical organization—we are informed that out of the 60 instruments owned by the band, 55 are the product of leading manufacturers in the world. That quality means increased cost can be best illustrated by the statement that two of the 57th instruments cost as much as a whole set purchased for use in this city a few years ago. Two recruits, both experienced cornet players, were added to the band's strength at last night's meeting.

Big Chinese Pow-Wow At Chink New Year

New York, Jan. 28.—Everybody and everything in the little triangular section of the lower East Side, which constitutes New York's Chinatown, is being rehabilitated, for the annual period of house cleaning, renovating, settling of accounts and—most important of all—hair-cutting is on. At midnight to-night every man and every house and shop must be absolutely clean, wearing new dress and adorned with decorations of righteousness, and all outstanding accounts must be paid, for to-morrow is the beginning of the Chinese New Year 4912, and the celebration will be one of unusual significance as well as of happiness and good cheer.

Already there is a scarcity of fat little pigs for roasting in the East Side markets. This is because the Chinamen have bought them up in advance for their feasts. There will be a series of progressive banquets, one after the other in rapid succession. The leaders and other members of the rival tongs will sit about the same festal board, for during the New Year festivities a truce is declared and the deadly warfare which has cost the lives of a dozen Chinamen around Pell and Mott streets during the past twelvemonth will be forgotten.

The new moon will appear next Monday, and on this day of the appearance of the new moon the New Year festivities will be at their height and the business of queue snipping will be general. On that day Wu, the greatest of all living Chinamen, will sacrifice his queue and all the high-class Chinamen throughout the world will sacrifice theirs. Already checks for turns in the chair are being sold by the celestial barbers and that day the queues will fall like soldiers on a battlefield exposed before a raking fire of shot and shell. This universal sacrifice of the "pig-tail," a Chinese institution many thousands of years old, is regarded as (the most pronounced step yet taken in the march of the new civilization in China.

The Flags Fly at Half Mast at Gloucester

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 27.—Every pressure that Gloucester can command will be brought to bear against the ratification of the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States, so long as the agreement provides for the free admission of fish to the United States. It was said here to-day that the free fish would "smother" the fisheries industry an both the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts of the United States.

All of the fishing vessels in port displayed their colors at half-mast to-day as a mute protest. The Board of Trade planned a meeting for this afternoon at which committees representing the cod, herring, mackerel and other branches of the fisheries will be appointed to invade Washington to record Gloucester's protest in emphatic terms.

WORKED WONDERS IN THIS CASE

RHEUMATISM AND WEAK HEART CURED BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

The Doctor Helped Mrs. Steven Roy, But There Was No Complete Cure Till She Tried Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Rock Mills, Grey Co., Ont., Jan. 27—(Special)—"I must say Dodd's Kidney Pills worked wonders in my case," says Mrs. Stephen Roy of this place. "I suffered with Inflammatory Rheumatism in my right arm, and though I tried several medicines the swelling increased and was very painful. My hands and limbs were also badly swollen.

"I got a doctor and he helped me, but the swelling never entirely left. He said it was because my heart was weak. Then I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills and, as I said before, they worked wonders."

Rheumatism of any kind is caused by disordered Kidneys failing to strain the uric acid out of the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure it by curing the Kidneys. They also cure the weak heart by making pure blood and lessening that organ's work of propelling the blood through the body.

Dodd's Kidney Pills only cure the Kidneys, but they always do that. And with healthy Kidneys you can't have Rheumatism, Lumbago, Heart Disease, Dropsy or Bright's Disease.

AN ATROCIOUS CRIME

Intensely Sensational Case On In U.S. Court.

Maryville, Mo., Jan. 28.—The case of Hezekiah Rascoe, charged with the murder of the Hubbell family, will be called for trial Monday before Judge W. C. Ellison, who, by a peculiar coincidence, defended Rascoe a number of years ago when he was tried for the murder of Mrs. Kate Baumli.

The murder of the Hubbell family occurred on the night of November 20th last and was one of the most atrocious crimes ever committed in Missouri. The victims were Oda Hubbell, a farmer, and his wife and two children. The family lived on a farm near the village of Barnard. On the night of the tragedy neighbors heard shots at the Hubbell home and soon after it was discovered that the house was burning. When the flames had been extinguished the searching parties found the charred remains of the two children in their beds, where it was evident they had been killed while sleeping. Hubbell's body was found on the floor in an adjoining room, and his wife's body was in bed where she probably had been shot without warning. Indications pointed to a probable struggle between Hubbell and the murderer.

Bloodhounds were rushed to the scene of the quadruple murder. They followed the trail to the home of Hezekiah Rascoe and entered his room, where some of his garments were found with blood stains on them. Rascoe was arrested and hurried to St. Joseph for safe keeping. He denied all knowledge of the crime. His previous record is very damaging. Though scarcely thirty years of age he has served ten years in the penitentiary, for the murder of Mrs. Baumli, a farmer's wife whom he murdered in her home near Arkoe, after attempting to assault her.

England's Aged Peers

London, Jan. 28.—The Earl of Feversham, one of the few peers who were alive when George IV. was on the throne, will celebrate his eighty-second birthday anniversary to-day. Despite his four-score-and-two years, however, Lord Feversham is not by any means the grand old man of the peerage. The Earl of Wemyss is in his ninety-fourth year and continues to take an active interest in public affairs. Then there are Lord Strathcona, who is ninety, and several others who have passed their eighty-fifth year.

AMERICAN PLOW WORKS ORDERED BUILDING OF $2,000,000 FACTORY AT HAMILTON TO CEASE.

Great Blow to Fruit Men—Lands at Niagara Worth $500 Won't be Worth More Than $100, Says E. D. Smith.

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 28.—That the new tariff regulations are going to work great harm to Hamilton's huge agricultural industries seems evident in view of the fact that early yesterday the Oliver Chilled Plow Works of South Bend, Ind., who are building a $2,000,000 plant here, wired the local managers "to stop all work until further notice." This was done owing to the fact that tariff changes will seriously effect them as far as their Canadian plant is concerned. It is the general opinion locally that Hamilton will, perhaps, be affected more than the majority of Canadian towns owing to the fact that many Canadian branches of American industries are located here. These were erected in Hamilton in order to avoid the tariff regulations.

May Look for Bitter Opposition---Are Being Slaughtered to Make Reciprocity Holiday, Declares Rebellious Republicans

Washington, Jan. 27.—There will be no reciprocity with Canada, at least at this session of Congress, and probably never under the terms of the proposed agreement sent to Congress yesterday by President Taft. The definite statement was made on the best of authority.

Powerful interests are arrayed against the agreement's ratification.

The conflict involves features as important as those which characterized the long drawn out dispute over the Payne tariff bill.

Agricultural interests in the West and fishing interests in the East, with a host of manufacturing interests, will fight the ratification of the treaty bitterly.

THE EAST OPPOSES.

Because fish has been placed on the free list, such powerful Senators as Crane and Lodge, of Massachusetts, will oppose the treaty.

So far, the President has received no assurances of support from any of the Republican party leaders.

In the meantime, the present duties on pulp and paper imported from the United States in Canada will remain.

Whenever pulp and paper entered the United States from all parts of Canada, free duty, then similar articles will be admitted into Canada from the United States free of duty. This is as remote as it ever was.

TO GET MRS. SCHENK LIBERATED ON BAIL

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 27.—Mrs. Laura Schenk, who was virtually acquitted yesterday of the charge of poisoning her husband, John O. Schenk, the millionaire packer, probably will be released on bail to morrow. A motion to reduce the $10,000 bond under which she has been held since her arrest November 5th, was to have been made at noon to-day, but the indisposition of the Trial Judge Jordan and Prosecuting Attorney Handlan caused a delay.

"There likely will be no effort to get Mrs. Schenk out to day," Attorney J. J. P. O'Brien, for the defence said. "We feel confident we will be able to have the bail reduced."

Prosecutor Handlan said the next trial of Mrs. Schenk would not take place in Ohio County. "I probably will ask a change of venue to Brooks County," he said. "It would be almost impossible to get an impartial jury here again."

The case will be docketed for the next term in all probability.

The annual banquet of the Bell Telephone Co's staff was held in Hooper's parlors on Thursday night and was a most enjoyable affair.

In addition to the local representatives of the Company, many of the district exchange managers were present.

A special feature and one that was much enjoyed by those present, was the instructive address by Mr. N. Lash of Montreal, who spoke on the building in and the manipulation of the Private Branch Exchange, as that form of installation is termed. Mr. Lash illustrated his paper and address with diagrams, adding very much to the interest and gaining the whole attention of his audience.

The dinner was served in Hooper's best style, and called for favorable comment from those present on the excellence of the viands and the service. The dining room was handsomely decorated and the whole thing was well done. The remarks of approval to Mr. Hooper were well deserved.

Mr. G. O. Cameron, the local organizer, was chairman, and made a most efficient presiding officer, and he was very happy in his introduction of the several speakers.

Mr. F. W. Doan, district superintendent gave a brief history of the Telephone Club, described its objects and said it was organized as a means of imparting instruction and information to employees. It had, to a considerable extent, filled the purpose for which formed, and had proved a success as a social organization as well. It helped to maintain a spirit of emulation in the staff and force, and cultivated a loyalty to the company and its projects. He moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Lash for his able paper and address, which Mr. Lash acknowledged.

Mr. A. A. Smith, chief of the local plant department, and late manager at Peterborough, spoke on the duties of the position and in appreciation of the club.

Chief Howard, of the fire brigade, who is an honorary member of the club, presented his congratulations, and gave some interesting details of the efficient service supplied by the local system.

Mr. Choquette, of the head office plant department, Montreal, said that it was proposed to instal over 600 miles of new wire in Peterborough in the spring, to meet the growing needs of the city. He gave some accounts of the difficulties of building lines in the mining districts, and how the work was accomplished.

Mr. Cunningham of the Deseronto Exchange, gave an account of the doings in his neighborhood, and the chairman explained that a new club would be organized, to be called the "3,000 Club," to work for the end that presently there would be 3,000 telephones installed in the district.

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT
He was surprised at how the sores healed—He took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted scores of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 6 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish. W. TRADERS BANK HAS GOOD YEAR.

The annual report of the Traders Bank of Canada for the year ended December 31st, 1910, reveals a very satisfactory condition of affairs.

The net profits for the years after making the usual provision for bad and doubtful debts, amounted to $524,351, which with the balance carried forward from the year previous of $102,443 makes $626,794, available for distribution. Four Dividends at the rate of 2 per cent. quarterly were paid during the year and $100,000 transferred to rest account. $15,000 was written off bank furniture and $10,000 transferred to officers guarantee and pension funds, leaving a balance of $153,434 to be carried forward.

The bank has a paid up capital of $4,354,550 and a rest account of $2,300,000 and its deposits bearing interest amount to over $29,000,000 while its deposits not bearing interest amount to over $7,000,000. The bank is particularly strong in quickly available assets and in specie and Dominion notes, these totalling nearly $12,000,000.

The bank's commercial loans now amount to $32,810,000 showing that it is doing its full share in meeting the business needs of the country. The total assets amount to over $47,152,000 indicating that the bank has made rapid strides during the years which it has been in existence. Altogether, the showing made by the bank is one which reflects the highest credit upon the president, directors and general manager of the bank. Its management has been along safe conservative lines.

YOUNG MEN IN POLITICS.

Canadians are gradually awakening to a sense of national responsibility, and to a realization of the fact that they are no longer members of a small dependent community, but rather citizens of a rapidly growing nation which is taking its place in the world affairs and which will eventually exert a great influence in world politics. The old regime of self-satisfied dependency on Great Britain for protection is ending and we are becoming conscious of the necessity for bearing our own burdens on our own shoulders. There is room in our public life for young men, actuated by a sincere patriotic spirit, loyal to British institutions, and capable of taking their share of the Government of the country. In order to meet this demand our young men should pay close attention to the great political questions of the day, and give time to the consideration and discussion of political problems. For without a knowledge of world affairs and without a clear conception of political responsibility and of the science of government, the young men of to-day, who will be the governing men of the future, will be but little adapted to manage the affairs of a Dominion with ever extending Imperial and foreign relations.

CONTINUED

"I don't like leaving you," he murmured, "but our only weapons are a sword and a brace of empty pistols. If we run on another half mile we shall be shot down where we stand without any means of defending ourselves. On the other hand—"

Then the budgerow struck a submerged rock with a violence that must have pitched him overboard were he not holding Nejdi's headstall at the moment. She careened so badly that Grace shrieked and Malcolm himself thought she would turn turtle. Then she swung clear, righted herself, presented her broadside on to the current, and, with a crash, less violent but more disastrous, tore away the mud bank and wrenched the spar joyfully out of the top of the mast. The boat was still full of course, but by some miracle left the occupants of the boat uninjured.

And now the maimed craft was carried along sluggishly, drifting back towards the centre of the river, while the men in the other boats set up a fiendish yell of delight at the catastrophe that had overtaken the doomed Feringhis. Their skilled boatmen evidently knew of this reef. They stood away towards the shore, but the triumphant jeering that came from the crowded decks showed that they meant to pass their dismantled quarry, and wait in safer waters until it lumbered down upon them.

Malcolm suddenly became aware of his wounded arm. With a curious fatalism he began to dissect his emotions. He arrived at the conclusion that the drop from the nervous tension of hope to the relaxation of sheer despair had dulled his brain and weakened his physical powers. This, then, was the end. There could be no doubt about it. He quieted the startled horses with a word or two and spoke to the girls again.

"You may as well come on deck now," he said. "It is all up with us. If a friendly bullet puts us out of our misery, so much the better. Otherwise my advice to you both is to leap into the river rather than be recaptured."

Grace was sobbing hysterically, but Harriet, clasping her fondly in her arms, looked up at him.

"No," she said, "we must not do that. Our lives are not our own. The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord!"

Frank winced in his anguish. To a puissant man there is nothing so galling as helplessness; what a game of battledore and shuttlecock had been played with him and those bound up with his fortunes since the moulvie's man-trap brought him headlong to the earth in the main street of Rai Bareilly!

"Hurroor!" yelled Chumru, excitedly. "Look! There below! A smoke ship! And see! Those sons of pigs are making for the bank!"

Malcolm could scarce believe his eyes when they rested on a small steamer with the British flag flying from the masthead, coming round the bend. Yet there could be no mistake about it. British officers in white uniforms were standing on her bridge; the mussles of a couple of guns showed black and business-like over her bows, while her forward deck was packed with men in the uniform of the Madras Fusiliers. Her commander seemed to take in the exact position of affairs at a glance, and, indeed, the half-wrecked and almost empty boat in mid-stream, so eagerly followed by two thickly crowed craft now close hauled and putting forth desperate efforts to reach the bank, presented a riddle easy to read.

That twinge of pain quitted Frank's arm as speedily as it had made its presence felt. He helped the girls to the raised deck, so that the people on the steamer could see them. It was not necessary. An officer waved a hand to them as the sturdy little vessel dashed past, raising a mighty spume of white froth with her paddles, and soon her guns were busy. There was no question of quarter. Captain Spurgin had been with Neill at Allahabad. He knew the story of Massacre Ghat, of Delhi, of Sitapur, Maradabad, Bereilly, and a score of other stations in Oudh and the Northwest. His gunners pelted the unwieldy budgerows with round shot until they began to sink. Then he used grape and rifle fire, until five minutes after the Warren Hastings came on the scene, there was nought left of the Fatteh pore navy save some shattered wreckage and a few wretches who strove to swim amidst a hail of lead and in a river infested with crocodiles.

When the steamer dropped down stream and picked up the fugitives Malcolm learnt that Spurgin was cooperating with Renaud. The one cleared the river, the other was hanging men on nearly every tree that lined the Grand Trunk Road. And Havelock, nobly aided by Neill, was moving heaven and earth to equip a strong force at Allahabad to avenge Cawnpore and raise the expected siege of Lucknow.

As Malcolm himself brought the earliest news of the investment, he and Chumru were put ashore with a small escort, in order that they might join Major Renaud's column, and hurry to Havelock with his thrilling tidings. Spurgin promised to visit the village on the east bank, release Hossein Beg, and make him a hostage for the ryot's welfare. As for Harriet and Grace Keene, they would be sent south as soon as a carriage could be procured.

The two girls bade Frank farewell with a gratitude which was embarrassing, but Grace, more mercurial than Harriet, ventured to say:

"I suppose you are longing to see Winifred again, Mr. Malcolm?"

"Yes," he replied, well knowing the thought that lay behind the words. "You are her friend, so there is no reason why I should not tell you that she is my promised wife."

"Then you are both to be congratulated," put in the elder sister, "for she is quite the most charming girl we know, and our opinion of you is not likely to be a poor one after to-day's experiences."

"What? After an hour's acquaintance?"

"An hour! There are some hours that are half a lifetime. Good-by, may heaven guard and watch over you!"

Renaud despatched Lawrence's messenger to the south in a dak-gharry or post-carriage. Chumru would have taken the servant's usual perch beside the driver, but Malcolm would not hear

ASSETS OF THE COMPANY

$10,000,000 of stock still in the Treasury.

$10,000,000 pooled for 9 and 18 months.

500 acres of land; value, $3,000 per acre.

6,500 feet deep waterfrontage; value, $200 per front foot.

154 patent improvements obtained over the present most modern sleeping car as shown by patent rights and model and approved by railway experts.

A subsidy obtained from the Municipality of North Vancouver of 5 per cent. for 15 years on $200,000, and freedom from taxation of our plant and 30 acres of land for 10 years.

A subsidy obtained from the Dominion of Canada, 3½ per cent. for 25 years on $1,214,000, for the purpose of building a dry dock of 15,000 tons at Rosslyn, the Company's townsite.

A very valuable brick clay deposit has been discovered on the Company's property. This will be developed to its fullest capacity, as brick clay is very rare here, Vancouver even importing from Seattle millions of brick annually.

NOTE.—A shareholder participates in every asset of the Company.

LIABILITIES OF THE COMPANY

Amount yet owing on land, extending over a period of four years, $446,000.

REMARKS

MORE LANDS

The Company proposes to purchase lands surrounding their townsite, and to this end are securing options on about 250 acres, with about 2,800 feet of deep waterfrontage adjoining that which they now own.

MINES

They have also secured an optian of purchase of a group of ten claims of very valuable iron deposits situated within twelve miles of their townsite. The Company believe, located as they are in a country which abounds with everything necessary to the smallest detail for turning out a perfect car. should go to nature's storehouse for their material, and with this end in view have secured the above group.

SHIPBUILDING

In addition to building the Imperial Sleeping Car, cars of every description will be contracted for, and just as soon as their dry dock is completed, the Company intend to use it to the greatest advantage in building ships of the largest tonnage. As there will be but three or four docks in the whole Dominion, they will encounter but very little competition in the building of the larger class of vessels.

SALE OF LANDS

The Company do not intend to sell any of its land until its dry dock, car works, sawmills and other industries are in operation, and in this way secure as nearly as possible all the profit derived from the establishment of these great works.

CLEARING OF LAND

The Municipality of North Vancouver have under consideration a proposition from the Company whereby the Company promise to clear their whole townsite on condition the Municipality will at once clear and grade all the streets, charging the cost of same to local improvement taxes. The Municipality view the Company's proposition with great favor. This plan would at least double the price of the Company's holdings.

PURCHASING STOCK

A small block of stock is now on the market and can be had on very easy terms of payment. This once sold, the Company will have no difficulty to borrow on their assets at from 4 to 5 per cent. any money they will require for improvement purchases, and in this case all stock will be withdrawn from the market.

Travers to be Examined as to Mental Condition

Toronto, Jan. 27.—It is understood that counsel for one of the men for whom the police have a warrant in connection with the Farmers Bank smash, is taking steps to have W. R. Travers, the convicted general manager, examined as to his sanity. When seen, the lawyer refused to give full information, but he said he had arranged to have two well-known alienists examine him, and if their report warrant it he will move to have Mr. Travers committed to an asylum.

Were that to occur, then whatever Travers told the police in the confession he made before he was sentenced would count for naught, and would hamper every move the police have so far made in the case, as it is practically upon what Travers said that the authorities have acted so far.

Made a Religion of Imperialism

Montreal, Jan. 26.—Henri Bourassa, in a second article headed "The Navy and the Clergy," supporting the theory that the British government aims at their conversion to the pro-naval policy, says that Lord Grey began three years ago his propaganda amongst the religious authorities of Canada. His Excellency paid prolonged visits to Montreal and took in the colleges of the city, where he manifested the very greatest interest in their work. He invited to his own table the heads of several of these institutions, never losing an occasion to show them the beauties of this imperial religion. The third centenary of Quebec was also an occasion, and he took charge of the whole business as a great imperial manifestation.

After speaking very severely of a great many people, Mr. Bourassa says that while the college professors and priests were being denounced for harbouring Nationalist sentiments, threatening them with the same end as those of Portugal, Lord Grey adjured at least two eminent Quebec prelates to place themselves at the head of the Imperialistic reaction.

They also painted at Rome and at London under the blackest colors the Nationalist movement. It was represented as a revolutionary uprising, when the Church might be dragged into a situation in which the indignation of the Anglo-Protestant majority might be showered upon the Church in Canada, and cause the good will of Great Britain to be withdrawn from the Catholic Church.

Young Mother Tries to Kill Her Child

A SAD AND PITIFUL DRAMA OF THE UNDERWORLD REVEALED IN TORONTO COURT.

Victim of Epilepsy Will be Sent to The Asylum—Story of Pinching Poverty.

Laughing and cooing to its nurse in the Women's Hospital, 65 Bloor street east, Toronto, is a beautiful baby, just a few months old.

Sitting in the police cells, rocking from side to side, and wringing her hands in silent anguish, is its mother.

Her name is Florence Payette. She is just twenty-five years old, and has already made more than one attempt to strangle her child.

This was the sad and pitiful drama of the underworld revealed before Magistrate Denison in the Police Court, where it was decided after a brief investigation to have the young matron examined as to her sanity, and if insane she will be committed as a lunatic.

The story woven round the unfortunate is not new, and the setting is familiar to many. In the court there was little, if any pity aroused. But the diminutive, huddled-up figure in the dock, plainly clad in a modest dress of dark navy blue suit, with a little white shawl of wool, loosely thrown over her dark curls, and partly covering a thin, drawn, but exceptionally pretty, white face, told the old story of the pinch and poverty that surrounds the unfortunate dwellers below the "head-line."

To her the proceedings seemed veiled and meaningless. She sat as if in a trance, and the only signs that she showed were not of fear, but of restlessness.

MATRIMONIAL HOAX

Would-be Husbands and Wives in a Paris Cafe Who all Wore White Roses

A well-planned hoax had an amusing result at a Paris cafe. A few days ago two advertisements appeared in the newspapers. One of them was supposed to be from a rich woman who was looking for a young husband who need not necessarily have any money; the other from a rich man who was looking for a young wife. In this case also there was no need for the woman to have means of her own.

Answers to these advertisements came in by hundreds. Both had been written by the same person. To each one of them a reply was sent, asking the man or woman, as the case might be, to meet the "advertiser" at the cafe. It was also requested of each man and woman that a white rose should be worn for identification purposes.

Having made these plans, the advertiser then wrote to the police saying that there was to be a big demonstration of Royalists at a certain cafe. Thirty detectives were accordingly on the scene.

Soon large numbers of young men and young women began to assemble at the rate. At first the white rose that each one wore was regarded as a coincidence, but it soon became evident that they were the victims of a hoax, and after a little embarrassment, followed by hearty laughter, the crowd dispersed.

POSTMEN'S HEADGEAR

Glasgow Carriers Will Have a Double-Peaked Cap

Next spring will see many Glasgow postmen in all the glory of the new double-peaked cap. There is a difference of opinion among the men as to its beauty and its comfort, but its adoption will not, we understand, be compulsory, as the "fore and aft," as the cap or shako has been termed, will be supplied only to offices where the three-fourths of the staff are in favor of it. The cap has the advantage of being fairly light, with the weight well balanced, the rear peak coming somewhat low in order to protect the wearer against the dripping of rain down the neck, which is the great discomfort with the present style of shako. In large cities where distinct offices are established the new style of headgear will be supplied only if the vote is for the city as a whole. It is proposed to supply knickerbockers and puttees to rural postmen who go their rounds on bicycles, an innovation of which it is said the men are unanimously in favor.

FIRST QUAKER M.P.

Refused to Swear Usual Form of Oath —Descendant Elected

Joseph Pease, grandfather of the new Member for Darlington, was the first Quaker to enter the House of Commons. When he took his seat, in 1833, he refused to swear the usual form of oath. A Select Committee was appointed to inquire into precedents, and as a result of their report the new Member was allowed to affirm. When addressing the House Pease was careful to avoid the use of all titles. He dressed strictly in accordance with the rules of his sect, and refused to raise his hat on any pretext. After a time he instructed the doorkeeper to take his hat from him when he entered the House, and to replace it on his head when he went out. This saved him from appearing discourteous to the Speaker without wounding his own conscience.
